La Follette Asks Senate To Increase Income Tax

Seeks to Attach $800 Exemption, Middle Bracket Rise to Pending Bill

Other Fiscal Measures

PROSPECTS of a silver bloc filibuster continued last night to hang over the bill continuing the President's monetary powers, which expire on June 30 unless renewed. Page 2.

SECRETARY ICKES proposed to a House committee an authorization for a new $500,000,000 PWA program. Page 2.

Opposition Expected

By Robert C. Albright

Amendments broadening the Federal individual income tax base, with lowered exemptions and increased middle bracket surtaxes, yesterday were offered in the Senate by Senator La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin.

La Follette said he will ask the Senate to add his "ability to pay" tax proposals to the $1,644,300,000 corporate tax relief bill which is slated for Senate consideration today.

His action followed public espousal by the President last week of a slight lowering of income tax exemptions and some increases in middle-bracket taxation.

$800 Single Exemption

While the President said he did not expect action this session and discounted prospects of any large resulting revenue, the Wisconsin Progressive asserted his determination to press the issue to a vote on the pending bill.

The La Follette proposals, similar to those he has offered each year, provide:

A reduction in married couple income tax exemptions from $2,500 to $2,000 and a cut in single person exemptions from $1,000 to $800.

An increase from 18 years to 20 years in the age limitation for which tax credit is allowed on dependent children.

Starting individual surtaxes on income in excess of $3,000. Surtaxes would range from 4 per cent on income between $3,000 and $4,000, to 12 per cent on $10,000-$12,000 income, to 36 per cent on $44,000 to $50,000 income to the present law's maximum of 75 per cent on over $5,000,000.

If that amendment fails, La Follette has another that would start the surtax on income over $4,000, ranging from 4 per cent on $4,000-$6,000 income, to 10 per cent on $10,000-$12,000 income; to 34 per cent on $44,000-$50,000 to 75 per cent on over $5,000,000.

Recommendation Questioned

Chairman Pat Harrison, of the Senate Finance Committee, meanwhile severed notice that he will move to lay aside the monetary bill temporarily and call up the corporate tax revision measure soon after

Squalus Cook Saw Ventilator Gush Water

D. C. Man Gives First Direct Indication That Valve Failed

By the Associated Press.

Portsmouth, N. H., June 21.—Slowly and without emotion, the cook of the sunken submarine Squalus told a naval court today that he saw a solid sheet of sea water pouring from the main engine room ventilating duct as the undersea boat carried 26 of her crew to their deaths on the ocean bottom on May 23.

The electrifying tale of William Isaacs, of Washington, who waded to the safety of the vessel's control room in water knee deep, was the first direct confirmation of previous theories that the air induction system—actually the surface ventilating system for the engines—was responsible for the disaster.

Isaacs was in the Squalus' galley—a small compartment off the after section of the after battery compartment—when the ship's final, fatal dive was executed.

"Like Air Escaping"

"I heard what sounded like air escaping," Isaacs said.

"I stuck my head from the galley. Salt water splashed in my face. I went aft to the door of the engine room. The door was closed but not dogged down. As I closed the stops, I looked through the door's eye port.

"I saw a solid sheet of water pouring down from the engine room opening of the main engine induction duct. There was no one in sight in the engine room. Water was coming out of ventilator openings and in water knee deep I waded forward to the unflooded control room as the ship started to up-angle by the nose."

He was among five men who slid to safety through the control room bulkhead as Lloyd Maness slammed shut that door.

Earlier, Chief Electrician's Mate Lawrence J. Gainor, of Honolulu,

Lou Gehrig's Career Ended By Paralysis

Players Stunned As Barrow Reads Report; Ailment Can Be Checked

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 21.—The "Iron Horse" was consigned to the baseball roundhouse today—to stay.

Infantile paralysis, slowly undermining the marvelous physique which had carried Lou Gehrig through 2,130 consecutive games as New York Yankee first baseman, has penned a dramatic ending to his playing career.

Gehrig returned last night from Rochester, Minn., where for a week doctors at the Mayo Clinic checked and re-checked to discover the reason for an unexplained slowing down, a slowing down which prompted Lou to remove himself from the line-up May 2 after compiling his phenomenal consecutive-games record. He appeared cheerful, but was mum as to the findings.

Barrow Breaks News

Today, Ed Barrow, Yankee president, after conferring with Gehrig, read a terse statement from a Mayo physician, a statement which marked the end of one of baseball's most brilliant careers.

"Mr. Gehrig will be unable to continue his active participation as a baseball player inasmuch as it is advisable that he conserve his muscular energy," the statement read in part.

It disclosed the 36-year-old Gehrig was suffering from amyothrophic lateral sclerosis, a type of illness involving the motor pathways and cells of the central nervous system, and known in lay terms as chronic poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis).

Afflicted Two Years

Barrow added that he believed Gehrig had been afflicted for about two years, but he hastened to assure everyone that the disease will be checked. Gehrig himself said he would start treatments immediately under the direction of his personal physician.

The few who went to the Yankee Stadium this noon to get Barrow's report on Gehrig's condition little dreamed of the coming drama as they watched the "Iron Horse's" familiar figure trudge across the deserted field toward the clubhouse. They did not realize the envelop tucked in his belt and gleaming brightly in the sun was his baseball death warrant.

A spontaneous cheer went up from his few teammates already in the locker room as he entered and passed into Manager Joe McCarthy's private office to confer with Barrow and McCarthy. Soon Barrow came out, and in a gruff voice announced to newspapermen:

"I have bad news for you fellows."

In dead silence he read the physician's report, then answered a barrage of questions:

"I can't believe it," commented the old baseball veteran whose word was law even to the great Babe

Leche Quits; FBI Probes WPA Deals

Governor Blames Illness; Way Cleared For Brother of Huey Long to Take Place

Gov. Richard W. Leche of Louisiana announced his resignation last night, while agents of the WPA and of the FBI were investigating charges of diversion of WPA materials to private property owned by the Governor.

Leche said his resignation was due to recurrence of effects of "a severe physical breakdown," suffered last January. He added that he would be required to devote his time to regaining his health.

His action will clear the way for Lieut. Gov. Earl Long, brother of the late "Kingfish" Huey Long, to become Governor, with Coleman Lindsey, speaker of the State House, to step into the post of lieutenant governor.

In Senate Record

On Capitol Hill yesterday there was read into the record of a Senate appropriations sub-committee, headed by Senator Adams, of Colorado, an article dealing with charges that WPA materials had been diverted to use at the home of Gov. Leche and at a farm owned by him. It was reported that an affidavit also was presented for the record while the sub-committee was in executive session.

Likewise, it was learned that WPA investigators have been in Louisiana for some time studying the charges and obtaining information and affidavits concerning them. It was said, also, that an agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation had flown to Louisiana last Friday in connection with the case.

Charge in Affidavit

One Senator active in investigation of charges against the WPA said last night that he had seen what purported to be copies of affidavits dealing with the charges and that he expected to receive shortly other original affidavits.

One affidavit reported to have been placed in the hands of officials was said to allege that WPA and University of Louisiana trucks were used to haul WPA material to the site of Gov. Leche's home at Covington, La., and that both WPA materials and WPA labor were used in construction of the property.

Long's Own Nominee

Leche became Governor of Louisiana in May, 1936, at the age of 38, following the assassination of Huey Long. It was reported that on his deathbed, Long called in his political aides and decreed that Leche should be the gubernatorial nominee on the Long ticket.

His resignation came as the State was preparing for a wide-open political campaign with half a dozen leaders of various factions planning to seek the governorship. Earl Long, who will become Governor, was to have been a candidate.

Wallis and Duke Are Anxious To Make Visit to America

Windsor Hints He May Buy Home in Talk With Newsmen

By Inez Robb.

Distributed by International News Service.

Paris, June 21.—"See Paris and die!" has been changed for the 12 American reporters who came to France on the Atlantic clipper to "see the Windsors and swoon."

The whole dozen of us were knocked off our feet by a surprise invitation to visit the Duke and Duchess of Windsor in their Paris home on the Boulevard Suchet at 6 p. m. today, two hours before we left on the night train for Marseilles, where the clipper takes off at 7 a. m. tomorrow for the return flight to Port Washington, N. Y.

But if we were dazed at the mass invitation, the entire 12 almost did a mass swoon at the charm of the chic duchess who obviously wants to come home. It was apparent, too, that the duke is anxious to visit the United States.

"Why don't you come home?" cried the male reporters en masse, all but falling at the feet of the petite, vivacious duchess who wore a black taffeta frock and jewels of carved coral and diamonds.

The duchess, completing her conquest of the press, with a frank grin, replied:

"Because I am afraid of you reporters."

The reporters were ready to repent.

Dressed in brown and smiling, the duke was interested to learn that I

Shanghai (Thursday), June 22.—Admiral Harry E. Yarnell, commander in chief of the United States Asiatic fleet, was said by reliable sources today to have rejected flatly Japanese demands that the United States destroyer Pillsbury and American citizens leave Swatow, China.

The admiral, who is at Chinwangtao on the North China Coast, was said to have told Admiral Koshiro Oikawa, commander of Japan's third fleet in China water, that the American Navy's duty was to protect American lives and property wherever they existed and that it would execute its mission.

British Stand Firm

(Swatow dispatches had said the Japanese naval commander had given all foreign warships, including the Pillsbury, until 1 p. m., or midnight E.S.T, Wednesday, to leave Swatow. A Hongkong dispatch indicated some confusion over the precise nature of the Japanese demands and quoted naval officials there as saying Japanese actually meant that foreign vessels should clear specified sections of the harbor where Japanese military supplies and troops were expected to land today.)

It was said Admiral Yarnell had informed Oikawa that the Americans at Swatow would attempt not to interfere with Japanese naval operations, but to have emphasized that the United States would hold Japan responsible for any damage or loss of life.

British authorities stated they had refused a Japanese demand for removal of the destroyer Thanet, and that there were two coastal steamers at Swatow prepared to take away any British desiring to evacuate.

Japanese Deny Demand

Earlier, British Embassy officials had reported that the Japanese had followed demands for evacuation of foreign war vessels with one for evacuation of all foreigners.

Otherwise, Japanese were said to have stated, "we cannot be responsible for their safety."

A Japanese naval spokesman here had denied that evacuation of foreigners and men of war at Swatow had been demanded by 1 p. m. He said that through the foreign consular corps here the Japanese China fleet yesterday had "requested" all foreign ships of whatever description and all foreigners in Swatow to evacuate the area of hostilities within and about Swatow, where

New Deal Plans Credit Aid to Small Business

'Little Man' Told to Seek Capital That Will Take a Chance

Secretary of Commerce Hopkins revealed yesterday that legislation to make it easier for small business to obtain capital funds was being prepared for enactment at this session of Congress.

Meantime, Edward J. Noble, Undersecretary of Commerce and Hopkins' right-hand man, predicted in a speech in Syracuse, N. Y., that there would be legislation in the near future to make credit reservoirs more accessible to all business. Small enterprises, he explained, would be the special beneficiaries.

President Promises Support

President Roosevelt, in a letter to David Lasser, head of the Workers' Alliance, promised "unqualified support" to all sound proposals which would increase the national income to a point that would solve the unemployment problem.

Addressing the Central New York Smaller Business Association, Inc., Noble said plainly that he was more in favor of a "resurgence in the flow of risk capital into your small enterprises" than he was in letting down the bars of bank credit.

"Venture Money" Foreseen

He cautioned little businessmen not to take too literally the agitation for going into debt. "You need capital that will take a chance," he declared, "not loans that involve prior claims on your assets, fixed charges to be met, and limitations on the freedom of your business decisions."

Noble's remarks tended to confirm reports in official quarters that the

Faulkner Faces Court Today in Perjury Case

W. Va. Postmaster Quits; Indictment Based on Milk Probe

Whiting Faulkner, whose lobbying activities created a sensation in the District milk investigation, will return to Washington today for arraignment before U. S. Commissioner Turnage on an indictment for perjury returned yesterday by the District Court grand jury.

A bench warrant was issued for Faulkner's return from Martinsburg, W. Va., where he resigned as postmaster just prior to his indictment, but Robert E. Lynch, his counsel in Washington, announced that he would waive extradition.

Indicted on Five Counts

A bond of $1,500 is expected to be set. The trial will not be held for several months, it was indicated.

Faulkner's resignation as postmaster was announced simultaneously at the Capitol by Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee and by Faulkner in Martinsburg. In his letter to W. W. Howes, First Assistant Postmaster General, Faulkner said:

"I request that this resignation be accepted at once as I do not wish to cause the Postoffice Department any embarrassment as a result of any statements recently made concerning me."

Based On Denials

Faulkner, whose case was brought to the attention of United States Attorney David A. Pine by Chairman Bates of the House sub-committee in charge of the milk inquiry, faces a maximum prison sentence of 25

Building Laborers Agree to Return To Jobs Today

Union building laborers who went on strike June 5 will return to work this morning.

Representatives of the union's and employers' negotiating groups signed a truce yesterday providing that wage differences shall be arbitrated by Howard T. Colvin, Labor Department conciliator.

Larry Kelly, president of the laborers' organization, estimated that 1,000 men would report for work today under terms of the agreement. He said approximately 500 already had returned, following the signing of tentative settlements with individual employers, and another 500 or more must remain idle until the carpenters' strike is ended.

Fair and slightly warmer is forecast for today, with the temperature approaching 90.

Realty Tax Cut Awaits Vote on Overton Plan

Morgan Gives King Revised Draft of Revenue Measure

By James D. Secrest.

The question of whether the local real estate rate will be reduced for the next fiscal year below the temporary $1.75 in effect for the past two years yesterday depended upon the success or failure of the Overton fiscal formula.

District officials, forecasting Congressional agreement on renewal of the business privilege tax in a modified form, said that the realty rate could be reduced only if the larger Federal payment is accepted by the House.

While the return under the Overton formula, if enacted into law, will depend upon the size of the general fund appropriation, it was estimated yesterday that the entire return from the Senate revenue bill will be approximately $5,600,000.

This is predicated upon an increase of $3,300,000 in the Federal payment above the $5,000,000 voted by the House, plus $2,000,000 from the business privilege tax, and $360,000 from added utility levies.

Revised Copy Submitted

A revised copy of the District revenue act, containing changes ordered by the Senate District Committee, was submitted to Chairman King by Jo V. Morgan, sole member of the Board of Tax Appeals.

Today the committee will meet to go over the changes before formally reporting the measure to the Senate.

All new taxes recommended in the Pond report and carried in the House bill have been eliminated, but administrative changes affecting some of the present levies have been retained.

The principal change in the business privilege tax is a further increase in the levy on doctors, lawyers and other professional men. This tax has been hiked from four-tenths of 1 per cent to 1 per cent. As carried in the bill reported by the House District Committee, it was eight-tenths of 1 per cent of gross receipts.

The tax on businessmen has been further modified to give the ad-

House Slashes 1,283 Planes From Army Bill

Republicans Force Cut, Majority to Seek Restoration Today

An almost solid House Republican minority succeeded yesterday in tentatively cutting in half an appropriation for 2,467 warplanes, leaving the Army 1,283 planes short of its planned expansion to 5,500 first-line craft.

By a teller vote of 121 to 113, the House slashed a $292,695,547 supplemental military supply bill by $36,866,714 on minority pleas that the Air Corps did not need a reserve of 2,163 planes. Final action on the measure, however, was delayed until today, when Democratic leaders will have an opportunity to marshal their forces to restore the eliminated funds for planes.

Moves to Adjourn

Contending that most of the planes would be "obsolescent when delivered," Representative Powers, of New Jersey, ranking minority member of the House military appropriations sub-committee, coupled his demand for slashing the reserve plane strength with a proposal to expand research funds by $9,000,000. Action on the latter amendment was deferred until today.

On another close vote, the House tentatively earmarked $1,000,000 of the $8,000,000 for air training in the bill for the training of colored pilots. The amendment offered by Representative Ludlow (Democrat), of Indiana, probably will be reconsidered today.

Representative Terry (Democrat), of Arkansas, protested this would require that one-eighth of those trained must come from a race that makes up only one-thirteenth of the population.

House leadership plans to pass the defense measure last night were hastily revised, when on two repeated votes on the plane cut, they found they could get less than half of the large Democratic majority on the floor. Majority Leader Rayburn quickly moved to adjourn, lest the Republicans, present in nearly full force, succeed in passing the curtailed measure. His action was successful.

Representative Powers announced he had introduced a resolution to

Broken-Hearted Father Follows 15-Year-Old Daughter in Death

Guy Gill kept his promise yesterday.

His 15-year-old daughter, Rosemary, was killed Sunday in an auto crash near North Beach. When he was able to speak, after the first shock of the news, Gill sobbed to friends, "I'll follow her." And as the eerie light of dawn filtered into his second-floor room at 487 G street southwest yesterday, he lay dead, the room full of gas.

But before he died the 54-year-old father, a veteran of the World War, made a last attempt to express his devotion to Rosemary. He had no money, so he requested his employer—Gill was a butcher—to advance $3 on his salary to buy flowers for his daughter's grave.

On a bureau in Gill's room friends found a crumpled photograph of Rosemary and the father's discharge papers from the 110th Machine Gun Battalion.

The odor of gas had awakened Raymond Ryon, with whom Gill lived. Efforts of the Fire Rescue Squad and a Casualty Hospital physician failed to revive the lodger.

A few hours later, Rosemary was buried from St. Aloysius Church.

Ann, 18, another daughter, was injured in the crash which killed Rosemary. She is recovering and has not been told of the new tragedy.

Teeth of Law to Clamp Down Upon Poisonous Lipsticks

With the eye-dye situation well in hand, the Food and Drug Administration—provoked by the Lea amendment which went to the White House yesterday—has come into a job that suits its fighting spirit exactly. It has found a poisonous lipstick!

A dragnet is closing in today on wholesale and retail establishments that handle the fancy French import. If a stick is left on the counters by nightfall, somebody's going to feel the full impact of the law.

More than 40,000 lipsticks were seized in one batch last week as they sailed into the New York Harbor, bright and colorful—but containing selenium.

Selenium helps make a beautiful color, but even plants and dumb animals jeopardize their future when they take one nip at it. If a hen gets hold of some selenium—just to show its effect—her eggs rarely hatch and when they do the result is apt to be a monstrosity.

Probably more than 100,000 of the selenium lipsticks will be taken off the market as a result of this drive—which is just the next in a series the Administration has had on its hands since the new Food and Drug act was passed by the last Congress.

Final provisions of the act, including adulteration laws and label-

Right of Way For Neutrality Asked in House

Bloom to Seek 2 Days of Unlimited Debate on Measure

House right of way next week for the Administration-sponsored neutrality bill was asked yesterday as the Senate Foreign Relations Committee for the third time postponed action on the legislation.

Representative Bloom (Democrat), of New York, acting chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said he would ask the Rules Committee this morning to sanction two days of unlimited debate on the measure, commencing next Monday.

As leaders forecast passage, the House Democratic Steering Committee was completing a check on the strength of the measure by regions. Despite the Senate committee's postponement, Representative Johnson (Democrat), of Oklahoma, vice chairman of the Steering Committee, said his group has been assured that "the Senate will act if the House does."

House Democrats Favor Bill

Johnson said House Democrats appeared predominantly for the measure, which repeals the existing arms embargo, permits trade with belligerents who acquire title to goods before shipment, and empowers the President to restrict American travel in combat zones established by him.

In the face of the President's request that Congress continue in session until the bill is passed, and leadership declarations that it will do so, opponents of the measure yesterday predicted Senate action will go over until next session once the House acts. Both Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, and Senator Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, said they did not believe Congress would be held into August to consider the measure.

Although the neutrality proposals had been made a "special order" of Senate Foreign Relations Committee business for yesterday, Chairman Pittman announced the group once more had voted a postponement. Pittman said it will be a special order of business beginning next Wednesday.

Waits for Other Bills

Pittman attributed the delay to the fact that Senators are now occupied with such other important legislation as the tax measure, the social security act amendments, and the monetary bill now pending in the Senate. It was the third committee postponement in three weeks.

The President on Tuesday indorsed the bill, said he thought it would increase America's influence for world peace, and stressed the need of action before any foreign outbreak of war so the United States would not face the issue of taking sides once war lines were drawn.

Ickes Offers 500 Million PWA Program

Backs Harrington in Requesting Return of $125,000,000 to WPA

A $500,000,000 PWA program was offered by Secretary Ickes yesterday to a Senate Appropriations sub-committee which sat the entire day listening to requests for more money from heads of Federal relief agencies.

The Secretary of Interior and chief of the PWA suggested to the Senate group headed by Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, that PWA should be given $100,000,000 for purely Federal projects and $400,000,000 for projects sponsored by local governments.

Ickes, who appeared at request of the sub-committee, echoed the view of Col. F. C. Harrington, WPA administrator, that the $125,000,000 of WPA funds which the House earmarked for PWA should be returned to WPA. If this alteration in the House bill is carried out, as now seems likely, the WPA will obtain the full Presidential request of $1,477,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

Attempt Last Week Failed

Last week in the House, an attempt by Representative Starnes (Democrat), of Alabama, to tack a $375,000,000 PWA appropriation on the relief bill was trampled down by a 2-to-1 vote.

Ickes is understood to have told the sub-committee, which met in executive session, that the present PWA program will reach its peak next month, with an employment roll of about 625,000.

Waiting their turn for a hearing while Ickes was talking were Federal bureau chiefs and representatives of the Workers Alliance, and the C. I. O. Besides Ickes, the sub-committee heard Dr. Will Alexander, head of the Farm Security Administration, and Aubrey Williams, chief of the National Youth Administration.

Alexander pleaded that FSA be given more than the $123,000,000 recommended in the budget estimate and granted by the House. (The FSA appropriation for the current year was $175,000,000.) Williams asked that the House appropriation of $100,000,000 for NYA be raised to the budget request of $123,000,000.

Harrington Ends Testimony

Earlier in the day, Col. Harrington concluded his testimony criticizing the House bill. He warned that the PWA earmarking would mean WPA could employ 170,000 fewer workers a month. Col. Harrington estimated that 1,500,000 persons will be on WPA relief rolls by July 1, 1940, compared with an average of 2,050,000 throughout the coming fiscal year.

On Capitol Hill

DUFFY

Duffy, a stanch Administration supporter while in the Senate will succeed Ferdinand A. Geiger, who retired. Duffy was defeated for re-election by Senator Wiley (Republican), of Wisconsin.

The Senate also received the Presidential nomination of Martin L. Welsh to be United States district judge in the Northern District of California.

The Senate confirmed the nomination of Rear Admiral Harold R. Stark to be chief of naval operations, succeeding Admiral William D. Leahy, scheduled to retire.

At the same time, the nomination of Leland Olds, of New York, as a member of the Federal Power Commission, to serve until June 22, 1944, was reported favorably by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Representative Dickstein (Democrat), of New York, chairman of the House Immigration Committee, said his committee had been advised by the Department of Labor that W. J. Cameron, information director for Henry Ford, complied with the law in becoming a naturalized citizen.

Cameron, the committee was informed, had believed his father, who held British citizenship and lived in Canada, had become an American citizen and therefore he was a citizen. When he discovered he was not a citizen, Cameron made his application.

Authority for postal inspectors to make arrests and serve warrants was asked of Congress by Postmaster General Farley. These men at present can pursue a man to the point of arrest, but then must call in local officers, Farley said.

Silver Bloc May Hold Up 3 Major Bills

Devaluation Is Put Aside for Tax Measure Today

Prospects of a Senate silver bloc filibuster hung last night as a threat over the heads of Administration leaders desperately anxious to obtain passage of three major bills within the next seven working days.

After two days of debate on the measure prolonging the President's powers to devalue the dollar and to maintain the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, a vote appeared as remote as ever last night, due to the combined efforts of advocates of currency expansion and the silverites.

With the consent of the silver bloc, an agreement was reached to temporarily shunt aside the devaluation bill in favor of the tax bill, which will be taken up today. Both measures, together with the $1,725,000,000 relief bill, must be passed before June 30 if a serious lapse in governmental activities is to be avoided.

However, leaders of the silver group, determined to block the devaluation bill until they receive Administration assurances of a higher price for silver than the 64.64 cents now paid, indicate they might continue their delaying tactics even with the tax bill under construction.

Both Majority Leader Barkley and Chairman Harrison of the Finance Committee said yesterday they expected the silver bloc would permit the tax bill to be passed without filibuster, but Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, leader of the silverites, hinted that he might go right ahead with his attempt "to make the country understand" the silver situation, regardless of what bill is before the Senate.

McCarran is author of proposals that would require the Treasury to pay $1.04 for every ounce of domestically mined silver, while his colleague from Nevada, Senator Pittman (Democrat), yesterday introduced an amendment raising the price to $1.27. The current world price is about 43 cents.

Meanwhile, Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, allied with McCarran in an effort to alter the devaluation bill, explained to the Senate—for 5½ hours—his plan to issue $2,000,000,000 of currency, backed by $1,500,000,000 in the stabilization fund and $500,000,000 "free" Treasury gold.

Wallace, Urged To Quit, Says He Will Not

Secretary Declares He Agrees With Hull, Defends Subsidy

A partial conference agreement on an unbudgeted $225,000,000 for farm parity payments and other items in a record-breaking $1,205,000,000 farm bill was sped to Senate approval yesterday, as Secretary of Agriculture Wallace defended export subsidy proposals awaiting House approval.

J. E. McDonald, Texas commissioner of agriculture, meanwhile at a press conference added his demand for the resignation of Wallace to similar action taken Tuesday by the Wisconsin Assembly. McDonald said he "heartily agreed" with the Wisconsin resolution and declared Wallace should resign unless he "recognizes his failure and offers something better."

Wallace at a press conference indicated he had no intention of resigning. As for the "Wisconsin developments," Wallace said:

"They should be very fruitful for the welfare of the country. Our enemies oftentimes help us more than our friends do."

Accord With Hull

Wallace scouted reports of serious differences between the State and Agriculture departments on foreign trade policies, and issued a statement designed to show accord between himself and Secretary Hull on export subsidies where necessary as an emergency measure to assure this country its fair share of world markets.

Avowing his own belief in Hull's reciprocal trade treaties, Wallace asserted that the Secretary of State has said he would "cheerfully recognize and acquiesce" in a cotton export subsidy plan when the President and the Agriculture Department believed "an emergency situation exists." He said he was convinced emergency conditions do exist and the "strictly temporary use of export subsidies" may be needed.

A $113,000,000 Senate farm bill appropriation, providing surplus removal funds necessary for the projected export subsidies on cotton and other commodities, will be carried back to the House for a separate vote today. House conferees are expected to urge its approval.

Compromise Amendment

A compromise conference amendment on cotton subsidies will be offered to the House at the same time, Senator Russell (Democrat), of Georgia, told the Senate yesterday. This amendment provides that at least 50 per cent of any surplus removal funds allocated to cotton be spent to promote domestic consumption of cotton. If this is approved, only about $35,000,000 will be available for cotton export subsidies, as against $60,000,000 the President indicated was needed.

Including the export subsidy appropriation, some $140,000,000 Senate farm appropriations left in conference disagreement will be directly submitted to the House today. Largest single item still to be determined, besides the surplus removal fund, is a $25,000,000 increase doubling farm tenancy program appropriations.

The $225,000,000 farm parity price appropriation agreed to in conference was approved over White House warnings that taxes must be provided to finance the outlay.

Earle Is Witness At Official's Trial

Harrisburg, Pa., June 21 (AP).—Former Gov. George H. Earle testified today at the trial of his secretary of highways that he never approved a fund transfer to cover an increase in the highway pay roll just before the 1938 Pennsylvania election.

The former official, Roy E. Brownmiller, charged with pay roll padding in one county, is the first of a dozen Democratic leaders to face a jury on general charges of misconduct. Earle himself was exonerated by a grand jury.

Fechner Confers Certificates At CCC Commencement

Not to be outdone by public and private schools in the District, the CCC last night held commencement exercises at Camp 333 in Cabin John.

Director Robert Fechner, flanked by staff members and school officials, passed out "unit certificates" to those completing six-month courses and conferred "proficiency certificates" on those entitled to the CCC kind of cum laude. These received documents attesting to their skill as truck drivers, cooks and other trades.

Nearly 100 Red Cross first-aid certificates were conferred, and Robert Barksdale, of 207 Seventeenth street southeast, a printer, was given the award for character and citizenship.

Fechner stressed the educational value of the CCC camps in his commencement address and pointed out that 28 enrollees had completed night courses in District night schools while at the camp. The objective of the CCC, he said, is to prepare young men to support themselves when they leave camp.

D.C. Alley Opening Law Amended

President Roosevelt yesterday signed a measure amending the District's ancient law governing conditions under which land may be acquired for the opening of alleys and minor streets.

Under the old law, in effect almost since the beginning of the District, the value of benefits from alley extensions were required to be equal to the cost and damages incident to the improvement, officials explained.

Under the amended statute, District authorities may now institute condemnation proceedings where costs and damages may exceed benefits.

Arnold Assails BuildingRestraints

New York, June 21 (AP).—High construction costs were laid to "unreasonable restraints of trade" today by Thurman Arnold, Assistant United States Attorney General, who said the restraints "appear at every level of the building industry."

Arnold, chief of the antitrust division of the Department of Justice, told the New York Building Congress in a prepared speech that "in building we have a series of restraints, protective tariffs, and aggressive conbinations which has practically stopped progress."

He said that "producers of building materials have fixed prices either by private arrangement or as the principal activity of trade associations. Owners of patents on building materials have used them to establish restrictive structures of price control, control of sales methods, and limits upon the quantities sold."

D.C. Grand Jury Indicts Teller Who Quit Bank

Adjustment Board Gets Appeal for Home for Aged

The appeal for a zoning change to permit the construction of a $300,000 Home for Aged Women at Forty-second and Military road northwest yesterday was placed before the Board of Zoning Adjustment.

A similar appeal last week was denied by the Zoning Commission with the advice that it be placed before the adjustment board. The request is for a change from residential restricted area to a semi-restricted area to permit the type of building proposed.

At the same time the board heard five other appeals, including one which will permit the erection of an office building at 1325 K street northwest. This appeal was made by the Kaufman-Goldnamer Co., Inc.

96 Receive Diplomas From Anacostia High

Ninety-six graduates of Anacostia High School were told by former United States Attorney Leo A. Rover last night not to be "too proud to choose as your objective the calling for which you believe yourself best fitted, even though it be not of the white-collar variety.

The invocation and benediction were given by the Rev. John E. Fort, pastor of the Anacostia Methodist Church. Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith, member of the Board of Education, presented diplomas, and John Paul Collins, principal, announced the following awards:

Carl Gerber and Catherine Ritchie, American Legion; Joseph Delbert Coon, University of Michigan Alumni; Winston Abernathy and Mary Jane Jones, Lion Club; John McCubbin, Rensselaer; Carl Gerber, Civitan; Ida Eaves, Kober home economics award; Catherine Ritchie, Home Economics Association award; Abernathey, class valedictorian, Readers Digest award. (List of graduates appeared in last Sunday's Post.)

7 Die, 16 Hurt In N. Y. Chinatown Flop-House Fire

New York, June 21 (AP).—A flophouse fire killed seven persons today in Chinatown, and injured eight other tenants and eight firemen.

Mayor LaGuardia declared the Oriental section "must come down" eventually.

An investigation began with an assistant district attorney's report that the old tenement buildings—chartered as clubrooms—were divided into about ten rooms each, 6 by 8 feet, with two or three beds in each cubicle. Some beds were merely planks on wooden supports, covered with old mattresses.

Britain Warns Tokyo It Will Feed Subjects

Halifax Denies That Tientsin Was Used as Anti-Japanese Base

By the Associated Press.

London, June 21.—Foreign Secretary Lord Halifax, expressing hope for a settlement of Britain's controversy with Japan and for a pact with Russia, tonight declared it never was the British intention to allow the Tientsin concession to be used as a base for activities "prejudicial to Japanese military interests."

If Japan could be brought to this belief, he added, and will give proof she does not seek destruction of Britain's Far Eastern interests as a whole, "I should hope the matter might be capable of settlement."

Grievances Not Stated

"I hesitate to believe that the government of Tokyo would wish deliberately to challenge the whole position and policy of Britain."

Earlier Prime Minister Chamberlain had told the House of Commons Britain had made it clear to Japan she would take necessary steps to assure adequate food supplies for British subjects in the blockaded British concession at Tientsin.

Anthony Eden, former foreign secretary, and others pressed Chamberlain for assurances the government had made it clear to Japan that Britain did not "acquiesce" in the blockade.

Chamberlain answered in the affirmative, but added that the Japanese government still had not given definite statement of grievances or indicated whether the dispute would be confined to a local issue or would involve the general question of all British concessions in China.

A statement from Tokyo was expected, however, in the next "day or two," he said.

Meanwhile, the cabinet continued to study reports of the board of trade and treasury on possible economic reprisals, but at today's meeting decided to postpone action until Japan's attitude is clarified.

R. M. Butler, undersecretary for foreign affairs, indicated Britain wanted the proposed British-French mutual assistance pact with Soviet Russia confined to Europe despite her present difficulties with Japan.

This view was expressed by Butler when he and Chamberlain faced a barrage of questions both on the Far Eastern situation and talks now going on in Moscow.

Butler turned down a suggestion that the Moscow talks be extended to cover the Far East and declared the negotiations were concerned only with Europe.

Chamberlain rejected a proposal that the government seek military staff talks with Russia before a mutual assistance pact is concluded. He also ruled out the possibility of sending a cabinet minister to Moscow.

The prime minister refused to state what points were holding up negotiations and would say only that the talks continued.

"Fault Not Britain's"

Discussing negotiations in Moscow, Halifax said tonight, at a dinner in his honor:

"I think if we have so far failed (to reach an agreement) we can truly feel that it has not been our fault."

"We have gone further than many would have thought it right in an endeavor to find an agreement," he said.

He declared, however, that Britain and Russia had the same objectives, and said: "With the conviction that we aim at the same thing we can succeed in dispelling distrust and I am confident we shall succeed in reaching an agreement."

No Progress Reported

Moscow, June 21 (AP).—Soviet Russian quarters tonight declared a two-hour conversation on a proposed British-French-Russian naval assistance pact had failed to produce any progress in the long-drawn negotiations.

Tass, official Soviet news agency, said:

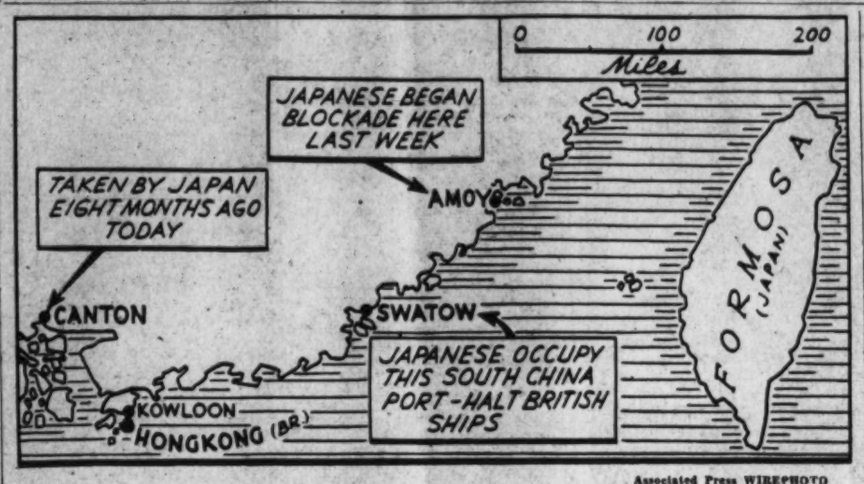
"Circles in the Peoples Commissariat of Foreign Affairs note that the 'new' Anglo-French proposals do not show any progress as compared to previous proposals."

The British and French recently received new instructions from their governments and some sources said a new Baltic formula was among the points discussed.

[A government official in London tonight declared Britain is strongly hopeful that an alliance will be reached in principle within a few days, International News Service said.

[The fact that Britain has "given way" to virtually all Soviet conditions was seen in the official's statement that the alliance probably will contain an all-inclusive guarantee of mutual aid with implied guarantees for the Baltic countries, whether the latter wish such protection or not. —Editor's note.]

U. S., Britain to Defy Japan, Keep Ships at Swatow



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Map shows port of Swatow which Japanese took in a quick raid. Yesterday Japanese naval commander ordered all foreign warships out of the harbor. United States and British ships are on duty there protecting American and British residents. Eight months ago, Japanese forces captured Canton (shown). Swatow was one of three seaports left in Chinese hands the Japanese navy began operations yesterday.

He said if any time limit had been set at Swatow "it was made without the authority of the commander in chief of the Japanese China fleet, who is in Shanghai."

The United States and British ships were on duty protecting 40 American and 80 British residents during yesterday's occupation by Japanese military and naval forces of this city, one of the few seaports on the south China coast that had been left in Chinese hands.

Plane Carriers in Port

The Japanese naval force here consisted of two aircraft carriers, five destroyers, two troop transports and five armed trawlers.

One thousand persons were killed and many more wounded in yesterday's attack by 800 Japanese who marched suddenly from two landing points north and south of the city.

An intense air bombardment and shelling from the warships preceded the occupation.

[Japanese dispatches to Hongkong, according to International News Service, admitted a large scale battle was imminent, with three Chinese columns reported marching on the city. These dispatches said the Japanese had completely occupied the city of 178,000, and that some parties had penetrated as far as 10 miles inland.

[The United States destroyer Pope was reported en route to Swatow.—Editor's note.]

(In Washington, State and Navy Department officials said they had no word of the order, but suggested the Japanese might have intended it as another general notice warning foreign ships out of occupied waters for a certain period, as they have on past occasions. A State Department official said these orders had not been applied to foreign or American warships, however.

The American Consul, Whitney Young, of New York, reported all Americans safe. Swatow, most important seaport open to China since the fall of Canton last October 21, does not have a foreign settlement like those in larger ports.

Millions of dollars worth of war equipment had entered Swatow in recent months, thence to be shipped overland to Shuikan, 240 miles inland, Chinese military headquarters for southeastern China.

A Test of Patience

Tientsin (Thursday), June 22 (AP). Britain's Tientsin garrison was reinforced and the inflow of food increased today as the Japanese army took stronger measures to enforce its blockade of the British and French concessions.

British authorities took measures to prevent any "incident." With both sides refusing to yield, the blockade seemed to have developed into a test of patience.

(Secretary of State Hull said in Washington that John K. Caldwell, United States Consul General at Tientsin, had handed the Japanese a protest from the American Chamber of Commerce there against blockade restrictions and inconvenience to American business activities.

Japanese Refuse Parley

(The Chamber of Commerce of the United States at Washington said the Tientsin group complained the blockade "will practically destroy American trade" in important Chinese areas. Most of Tientsin's American community live in the British or French concessions.)

Britons still were willing to negotiate lifting of the blockade on the basis of the original local incident—Japanese demands that four alleged Chinese assassins be turned over to them.

They made no attempt, however, to meet Japan's insistence that the strife be resolved on the basis of a change in Britain's whole policy in China.

The Japanese army commander, Gen. Homma, was said to have rejected a request by British Brigade Maj. C. B. H. Delamain for an interview, relaying the answer that discussions would be useless except on a wider basis than the British have offered.

An additional company of British soldiers was brought from Peiping to reinforce the Durham Light Infantry Regiment, regularly stationed here. The new troops raised the British military strength to about 300 men, not including 100 volunteers.

The Japanese countered with stricter measures on the Hai River, but the casualty toll along the electrified fence with which they have ringed the 950 acres of the British concession and the 250 acres of the French concession, remained the same—one dead dog.

Japanese soldiers, it was learned, attempted to halt the steamer Siannewo when she passed the Japanese wharf yesterday en route to Tangku with 100 British women and children, first of about 1,000 who will be evacuated from the concession.

The Japanese ordered the ship to return, but when the captain demurred, and he proceeded to Tangku, manded to know why, they did not port of Tientsin.

A British lighter coming upstream from Tangku was compelled to stop at the Japanese wharf and be searched, but was allowed to continue.

There still was no serious food shortage within the concessions. Such staples as rice and flour were stocked in large quantities and there was a surplus of eggs. Fresh vegetables were estimated at half of normal and meat at two-thirds of normal.

British soldiers began bringing in food from outside areas in trucks and French troops bought fresh supplies in the Italian concession.

(Foreign dispatches in Shanghai reported a critical food situation on Kulangsu Island, the International Settlement of Amoy, in South China. That area, too, is blockaded by Japanese.)

War Debt Talks

London, June 21 (INS).—The British government tonight decided to approach the United States on the question of reopening war-debt negotiations, to enable payments to start in December, 1939. The total debt, as of June 1 and including interest, is $5,495,338,374.

Instructions will be sent Ambassador Sir Ronald Lindsay in Washington to approach Secretary of State Hull and Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and to suggest a form of repayment involving either the interest or the principle, preferably the latter.

Sir John Simon, chancellor of the exchequer, and Montagu Norman, head of the Bank of England, agreed it might be necessary to raise money by a government-guaranteed loan, available for subscription by Americans.

France to Return Gold to Franco For Neutrality

Paris, June 21 (U.P.).—Premier Daladier today agreed to return $31,800,000 in impounded Spanish gold to Gen. Franco after receiving Franco's assurances Spain will remain neutral in event of a European war.

Daladier agreed to surrender the gold as soon as French courts lift the impounding acts.

His decision was based on assurances brought to Paris by French Ambassador Petain and confirmed by Spanish Ambassador Jose Felix Lequerica.

Marshal Petain had informed Daladier all was not lost for French and British interests in Spain and that Franco had not gone over wholly to the side of the dictators.

Faulkner Faces Arraignment

years and a fine of $10,000. His indictment was on five counts.

The indictment, 40 pages long, traces the history of the efforts of Faulkner to obtain a $1,000 fee from the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association, on an alleged promise to influence the voting of Chairman Randolph and other members of the House District Committee.

The indictment, however, is based on the denials of Faulkner before the Bates sub-committee of statements said to have been taken by dictographs by police under the direction of Chairman Bates and J. Edward Burroughs, counsel of the sub-committee.

The erstwhile postmaster denied on the stand the stenographic statements attributed to him with regard to Randolph and his claim that he could obtain advance and confidential information from Julia Castleman, former secretary of the sub-committee.

Randolph Constituent

Faulkner, a son of a former United States Senator from West Virginia, is a constituent of Randolph and was formerly chairman of the county Democratic committee. He was appointed postmaster upon recommendation of Randolph.

Each of the five counts in the indictment cites the Bates sub-committee's record of conversations alleged to have taken place between Faulkner and B. B. Derrick, secretary-treasurer, and John S. Barbour, attorney, of the Maryland-Virginia association. The conversations took place in the offices of the association, a downtown hotel, and Barbour's office.

The indictment cites also the testimony of Derrick before the House sub-committee with regard to the conversations and Faulkner's offer. It recounts Derrick's testimony that Faulkner told him he could direct the course of the inquiry either in favor or against the interests of the producers' association.

After citing Faulkner's repeated denials of statements read from the police record by Burroughs at the House inquiry, the indictment states that Faulkner knew "this testimony and answer were false" and that he "then and there did commit the crime of perjury, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided and against the peace and Government of the said United States."

Miss Castleman, who was appointed upon Faulkner's recommendation to Randolph, according to testimony before the House subcommittee, resigned as secretary of the sub-committee following the Faulkner case disclosure.

The Postoffice Department subsequently assigned an inspector to investigate the case, but has made no announcement of any action.

Ward Trial Today

Several of the ten charges against James J. Ward, president of the Embassy-Fairfax Dairy, in connection with the seizure of 2,400 gallons of alleged "bootleg" cream will be dropped when the case goes to trial today, it was learned yesterday.

After several postponements, the trial is scheduled to start before Judge John P. McMahon in Police Court. Ward is charged with violation of the 1925 milk act.

Block Airline Merger, Wheeler Warns CAA

Demands the Civil Aeronautics Authority block reported attempts to consolidate Western Air Express and United Air Lines were made yesterday by Senator Burton K. Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, with a warning he would call for a senatorial investigation of "monopoly" if such a deal is consummated.

Murphy Speaks Of Civil Liberties At Jersey City

Jersey City, June 21 (U.P.).—Attorney General Murphy today came to the home town of Mayor Frank Hague, who once boasted that "I am the law," and demanded that the Nation's citizens remove all government officials who "violate their public trust."

He did not mention by name the prominent New Jersey politician, whose income tax returns reportedly are being studied by Federal officials, but he cited a recent Supreme Court decision rebuking Hague and voiding a city ordinance restricting the right of free speech in the city's streets.

Speaking at commencement exercises of John Marshall College, the red-haired Cabinet officer made a strong plea for observance of civil liberties and for tolerance. He said that some persons favor civil liberty in theory, but do not practice it in their daily lives.

Czech Jews Lose Property Rights Through Decree

Prague, June 21 (AP).—Baron Konstantin von Neurath, German protector for Bohemia and Moravia, issued a decree tonight sharply curtailing the participation of Jews in the commercial life of the protectorate and placing all their business activities directly under his control.

Under the decree Jews are forbidden to acquire or lease real estate, business enterprises or securities, or to acquire any rights in such.

They must report to the national bank of the protectorate by July 31 all gems, objects of gold, silver or platinum in their possession. The buying, selling or pawning of these items is forbidden.

Jewish firms and Jewish organizations will be permitted to hold real estate and carry on business only with special written approval.

Nazis Ask Britain To Recall Consul

Berlin, June 21 (AP).—The German government announced today it had asked Great Britain to recall her consul-general at Vienna, Donald St. Clair Gainer, as a result of the British government's action in ousting Walther Reinhardt, German consul-general at Liverpool.

The official reason given for the demand was that Gainer "was involved in an affair concerning a forbidden information service."

The British government asked Germany to remove Reinhardt because of his alleged connection with an espionage case.

vantage of the lowest rate to a larger number of business firms operating on a small margin of profit.

The new scale starts at one-tenth of one per cent on gross receipts where the spread between cost and sale price is 5 per cent or less. It then jumps to two-tenths of one per cent where the spread is between 5 and 10 per cent, to three-tenths of 1 per cent where the spread is from 10 to 15 per cent, and to four-tenths of 1 per cent where the gross profit is in excess of 15 per cent.

The new draft allows businessmen to claim credit for tangible personal property taxes paid. This provision was stricken out of the House bill by the House District Committee.

The increases in public utility taxes recommended in the Pond report are carried in the Senate bill. These provide a uniform rate of 4 per cent on gross receipts for the Potomac Electric Power Co., the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., and the Washington Gas Light Co., and 3 per cent for the Capital Transit Co.

The change in rates will net the District approximately $360,000, it is estimated.

The limitation of $1.75 on the real estate rate has been stricken from the bill.

The Overton formula would produce approximately the same amount of money as the 25-cent real estate increase of the past two years, or some $3,300,000 over the present $5,000,000 lump sum.

Senate and House conferees on the District supply bill held their second conference without settling any of the major controversial issues. Almost half of the more than 100 Senate amendments have been compromised, it is understood.

6 More Deaths Laid to Poisoners

Philadelphia, June 21 (AP).—Twelve middle-aged men and women already held in the Eastern States insurance murders were indicted today in six additional slayings.

One of them, Herman Petrillo, has been convicted with the death penalty mandatory in the first of the slay-for-pay scheme trials. Others included Cesare Valenti and Morris Bolber, described by investigators as "master minds" in the plots.

New Deal Drafts Aid to Business

object of the projected legislation would be to place "venture money" at the disposal of small and medium-sized concerns instead of encouraging banks to make long-terms loans.

Such legislation would dovetail with the new lending program, although Hopkins said it would be separate.

With one of the bitterest Presidential campaigns in the Nation's history shaping up for next year, Administration advisers recognize that the New Deal cause will be weakened if the campaign finds business still sluggish and unemployment high.

President Roosevelt has indicated he may have an announcement tomorrow on the new lending program.

White House Conference

Considerable mystery surrounded a conference at the White House yesterday afternoon between Treasury officials and the President. Presumably the conference dealt with details of reorganization program, although there was speculation that the forthcoming announcement may have been discussed. Present at the conference were Secretary Morgenthau, John W. Hanes, Undersecretary; Herbert Gaston, Assistant Secretary; Edward H. Foley, jr., general counsel, and William H. McReynolds, administrative assistant to the Secretary.

What form the small business aid legislation will take apparently has not been determined. There has been some talk of creating a new kind of security—an income bond—as a device for making risk money available.

Hopkins said an effort was being made to work out something based on the principle of the loan insurance bill offered by Senator Mead (Democrat), New York. But it appeared that the principle was subject to flexible interpretation. If a new type of security is devised, it was indicated, provision may be made for purchase of the securities by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or some other agency.

Determined on Solution

"Your Government," Noble told the small businessmen, "is determined to work out a solution rooted in sound business practice."

He pointed to utility holding companies as an example of the danger involved in borrowing capital funds. Some schemes of this kind, he declared, may be "good arithmetic," but not sound business practice.

"The tendency of the entrepreneur," he declared, "is to shave his equity too thin. When hard times come, he has to discharge employes, restrict purchases, and do all sorts of things that hinder employment and recovery in order to scrape together enough money to pay those inescapable taxes and interest."

He ventured the belief that "a good many persons complaining about their inability to get credit" were merely making alibis for poor business management.

If a business is not operated on sound principles, he declared, "an ocean of credit will fail to do you any good."

Noble frankly admitted that heavy taxation had dampened the ardor of venture money. Disturbed labor conditions also have "tended to direct capital into hiding and away from hazardous employment," he said.

Pa. State Senator Fined in WPA Plot

Philadelphia, June 21 (AP).—Pennsylvania State Senator Joseph P. Dando, convicted of conspiracy to divert WPA labor for private purposes, was fined $2,500 today.

Five WPA foremen convicted with him were placed on five months probation. They were charged with having men on the WPA pay roll improve an amusement park owned by Dando, himself once a State WPA official.

2 Train Robbers Get $6,000, Bind Messenger

Cincinnati, June 21 (AP).—Theft of $6,000 in Federal Reserve notes by two men who boarded a Pennsylvania Railroad passenger train and bound Thomas McKernan, express messenger, was reported today by Railway Express Co. officials.

Secretary Perkins Sees Labor Peace 'In a Few Months'

Denver, June 21 (AP).—Secretary of Labor Perkins predicts peace in American labor "within a few months."

"A solution has been found for the great obstacle between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O., and other snarly little problems, such as who is to be president of what, should not be difficult to solve," she said in an interview.

Miss Perkins added she was not in a position to explain what she meant by "the great obstacle."

America Beckons To Wallis, Duke

had traveled with his brother and sister-in-law throughout their Canadian and American journey.

"They did a marvelous job, didn't they?" he said proudly. "We read the newspapers carefully. They had a wonderful reception all over. Wasn't that so?"

The duke emphasized his delight at the King's success in the job he surrendered for our American-born hostess. He said:

"None of my trips was as difficult as his. My trips were longer and there were always more rest periods. There was always a week off occasionally."

"But my brother was going continuously on the trip," the duke added with a broad smile. "This trip must have been most tiring. How long did they have at Banff and Jasper?

"Only 36 hours at Banff and only 24 hours at Jasper," I replied.

Windsor shook his head as if to imply that the time was not enough for a hard-working King.

"At one point on the trip, when all of us were so tired we were ready to collapse, I longed to send you a cable reading 'Your Royal Highness. You had the right idea'," I said.

The duke found this piece of none-too-subtle American wit very funny. He threw back his head and laughed delightedly.

"Sire," I said nervously, "I don't know whether I should tell you, but although the Canadians gave your brother a wonderful reception, really beyond the imagination, dozens of them said to me, 'Ah, if this were only our King Eddy, we would really do him proud.'

"Canada adores you," I added.

The duke blushed and looked helpless. He started his old gesture of bringing his hand toward his tie, then dropped the hand and murmured:

"Thank you."

I had first asked the duchess if I might tell the duke how the Canadians regarded him. "Do. He'll be so pleased," she replied.

When someone told the duke his recent broadcast appeal for peace and a cessation of propaganda was well received in the United States, he said:

"I'm happy for that. People don't trust politicians. They listen to their statements and then say 'What's the game behind it all?' I have no game and people can believe what I tell them.

"I firmly believe there is no disagreement so difficult it cannot be worked out without war. We all know a general war would mean the end of civilization as it now is, and I don't believe anyone is willing to take the responsibility for such a calamity."

The duchess also followed details of the royal tour closely.

"It must have been most tiring," she remarked. "The other night we had a private view of all the newsreels of the Canadian-American tour and it looked like an exhausting trip. They seemed to stand up under it wonderfully."

"You see," the duke said, "a king's life is not his own. Everything is arranged on schedule. I would like to make an American visit as soon as possible, but the world is in such tension."

"I feel so out of touch with America," the duchess said. "Although we seem to receive so many American newspapers. They were helpful in following the royal tour."

One of the party offered a champagne toast to the duchess, and she turned smilingly to her husband to ask:

"I cannot drink my own health, David. May I have a sip of yours?"

Later, the duke was asked if he had any intention of building a house in Baltimore—the former home of the duchess.

"I have not thought about it," he said, "but I may think about it in the future.

Buckner Aides Got 'Spot of Tea' But No Cash, Marshall Testifies

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 21.—The Government gingered up its mail-fraud case against William P. Buckner, jr., today with the testimony of Hollywood personages, including Herbert Marshall, British actor familiar for his quietly whimsical stout-fellow roles on the screen.

The central effort was to show that Buckner, a hail fellow promoter, through two of his four co-defendants, had made various approaches to get innocent Hollywood money as part of an alleged scheme to manipulate the market for Philippine railway bonds.

Marshall testified that when John Stuart Hyde and C. W. Turner, reputed Buckner associates, had come to call upon him he had given them nothing more than "a spot of tea."

As to the business matter which they had come to discuss—a matter which he acknowledged was quite vague in his mind—the actor said he had told his callers to take that up with Miss Helen Dawson, his secretary.

Miss Dawson produced stenographic notes of a conversation with Hyde and Turner in which the latter was represented as having said that "huge profits" could be made by dealing in Philippine bonds, and as having asked $6,000 from Marshall.

The secretary continued that Hyde had left for her employer a little note which read in part:

". . . There are no risks—the profits are enormous—it is one of those unbelievable things."

Everett Crosby, brother of Bing, the crooner, testified that Turner had tried in vain to get him to put $35,000 in the Philippine bond deal. He said Turner "admitted openly that the deal was not honest."

Mrs. Fletcher Dies at Home of Son in New York

Mrs. Christine S. Fletcher, 82, resident of Washington more than 30 years, died Sunday at the home of her son, Arthur A. Fletcher, in Valley Stream, Long Island, N. Y., it was learned here yesterday.

Mrs. Fletcher was the widow of George J. Fletcher. She was a member of St. Columba's Episcopal Church and a life member of Friendship Chapter, No. 17, Order of the Eastern Star.

Besides Arthur Fletcher, she leaves another son, Frederick A. Fletcher, of Baltimore, 13 grandchildren and 4 great-grandchildren. Funeral was yesterday at Weymouth, Mass.

1,283 Planes Cut From Army Bill

set up a special seven-man committee "to study the state of military and naval preparedness and the degree of co-ordination by the Army and Navy." He told the House the present bill "indicates the need for complete overhauling of the national defense program."

Representative Houston (Democrat), of Kansas, and Terry came to the defense of the Army plans to maintain 2,163 planes in a rotating reserve. Houston declared the Spanish Civil War showed that half of an army's planes will be wiped out in the first month of warfare, and that a reserve is necessary to bridge the time between "mobilization and the time replacements are ready."

"We don't know when the warring countries in the East will plunge the world into war," declared Terry. "Over in Europe there is mad and feverish activity to prepare lines on the Polish front. We must have an adequate reserve of planes now."

Houston declared that demands to delay the production program until our research laboratories gave us superiority in all types of planes would mean we would never have an air force. Developments move so fast, he said, that 15 to 60 per cent of an air force will always be obsolescent.

Representative Engel (Republican), of Michigan, charged the President's armament program was not based on the Army's recommendations as to what was needed, as the Chief Excutive has "adopted WPA policy" in "allotting the War Department so much money and telling them to go ahead and spend it." He declared "a mass of war propaganda was turned loose on the United States" after Munich to put over the expanded arms program.

Meanwhile, in another defense development, Representative Vinson (Democrat), of Georgia, introduced a bill authorizing a $125,000,000 airport improvement program throughout the United States. Expenditure of the money would be left to the President and the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

At the same time, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee approved a new treaty with Panama to increase the annual rental for the Canal Zone from $250,000 to $450,000, retroactive from 1933, and to adjust relations between the United States and Panama.

Senator Johnson (Republican), California, said he would oppose ratification of the pact on the ground a clause requiring the United States to consult with Panama in any move of American forces into Panama territory might handicap the defense of the canal. Secretary Hull has told the committee, however, that both governments are agreed that such consultation might follow, rather than precede, such a move.

Ghost Writing No 20th Century Innovation, Ashurst Reveals

Can Be Carried Too Far, He Warns, Citing Story of Speaker White and His Aaron Burr Speech

By the Associated Press.

Members of Congress who hire ghost writers to prepare their speeches were informed yesterday that the practice had been indulged in for centuries by the great men of history.

Authority for that statement was no less than Senator Henry Fountain Ashurst, of Arizona, the Senate's master of rhetoric.

Disputing a contention that ghost writing had its origin about 1900, the Arizonian wrote in the Congressional Record that the practice has flourished since the fifth century, B. C., when a Greek named Corax established a school and taught citizens how to urge their rights and claims in court.

Ashurst said it seemed to be definitely established that the speeches delivered by the Roman Emperor Nero were written by his prime minister, Seneca, and that Caesar had a ghost writer named Aulus Hirtius.

Moreover, he said, Samuel Johnson contributed nine lines to Oliver Goldsmith's poem "The Traveler" and four lines to Goldsmith's poem "The Deserted Village." Moreover, added Ashurst, no less an "authentic historian" than Senator Arthur Vandenberg, of Michigan, "is of the opinion that Alexander Hamilton wrote all but four lines of Gen. Washington's farewell address."

Apparently as a note of warning to his colleagues, however, the Arizona Senator recalled the tragic experience of Speaker John White of the Twenty-seventh Congress, who employed a ghost writer to prepare his farewell address.

It seems, he said, that the writer copiously from the farewell address of Vice President Aaron Burr to the Senate in 1805 and that when this was discovered White was "so overcome with mortification and disgust that he committed suicide."

Cecil B. De Mille Fashions A Tribute to America

'Land of Liberty,' a Mosaic, Made for Fairs; Broadway Stars to Visit Capital Sunday; This, That and the Other About the Theater

IN A SEASON when all branches of the theater have devoted more than usual attention to the matters of democracy and American ideals of government, it is to be suspected that the most impressive of all the motion picture documentations on the subject will prove to be Cecil B. de Mille's composite screen spectacle, "Land of Liberty."

"Land of Liberty" is not a newly filmed picture, but an assemblage of clips from as many screen plays as Mr. De Mille could lay his hands on bearing upon the constitutional right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. There are excerpts from 124 previously released pictures in the completed work. Necessarily these have been drawn from the vaults of practically all of the producing companies on the West Coast—and the East, too, if there are any producing companies in the East. There were at one time, at any rate.

BELL

This film record of the cinema's contribution to the defense of American institutions represents the motion picture industry's major contribution to the New York World's Fair and the San Francisco Exposition. It will be exhibited exclusively at opposite ends of the continent at the two fairs now in progress for the time being. Later, prints will be released to patriotic societies, universities and other groups primarily interested in the lessons in democracy which it stresses. "Land of Liberty" never will be presented in the commercial theater for profit. That last statement is predicated upon Cecil B. De Mille's flat declaration over the air Monday night in conjunction with his Lux Theater of the Air program.

It was a prodigious feat of editing that Mr. De Mille accomplished in the fashioning of this subject. He must have culled through something in excess of 1,500 reels of celluloid to get the scenes he wanted to dovetail into his finished mosaic. Conservatively, that would be in the neighborhood of 1,500,000 feet of film.

Has Ironic Aspects

Perhaps the irony of the whole thing is that until recently "C. B." never concerned himself greatly with the American scene. His earlier productions were Biblical spectacles, followed by far-flung historical pageants — "The Ten Commandments," "King of Kings," "The Sign of the Cross," "The Crusades," etc. Latterly, however, he has awakened to the fruitful material lying at his own doorstep and one therefore supposes that there will be more than a little of both "The Buccaneer" and "Union Pacific" in "Land of Liberty."

There is no one in the industry more competent to discharge this valuable service for the cinema and the historian's archives than Cecil Blount De Mille. He is one of the pioneers who produced the first feature picture ever made in Hollywood—long before there was any Hollywood—and has been at it, in the top brackets, ever since.

Speaking of patriotic films, there is one of unusual worth coming to the Earle screen tomorrow as chief auxiliary of the feature, "Naughty But Nice." It is another of the Warner Brothers' Technicolor shorts, dealing with a chapter in America's fight for independence that is seldom celebrated upon either the screen or the boards. "Sons of Liberty" tells the story of Haym Salomon, the patriot who saved freedom's cause when it seemed darkest by coming to Gen. Washington's aid with money to pay his starving soldiers. Based on historical fact and authenticated by extensive research, the film traces the activities of a patriotic organization known as the Sons of Liberty, of which Salomon was an heroic member. Claude Rains appears in the stellar role, under the direction of Michael Curtiz.

Reverting, if we may, to Mr. De Mille's Monday night broadcast, the play put on the air was "The Ex-Mrs. Bradford," remembered as a popular RKO-Radio screen mystery-comedy. The stars were William Powell and Claudette Colbert—as, of course, you know if you also listened in. Mr. Powell, long on the sidelines through illness, sounded at his best and in perfect health and spirits. It was the second time out for him in the part of the physician-detective, since he also played it in the picture. Miss Colbert played the title role, portrayed on the screen by Jean Arthur. This De Mille Theater of the Air is by far the best dramatic hour put on the ether and recently won that distinguished designation in a comprehensive national poll.

The Theater Guild's production of Philip Barry's comedy, "The Philadelphia Story," with Katharine Hepburn in the stellar role—although the Guild never stars anybody—reaches its one-hundredth performance in the Shubert Theater, New York, tonight. The play has been the leader among Broadway's legitimate attractions since its opening on March 28, averaging more than $22,000 a week. The advance sale also hit a new high early this week, when, on Tuesday, after the box office had closed, it was revealed that a total of $75,112.75 had been taken in for future performances. Since the play opened here at the National, the Washington critical fraternity might just as well stand up and chortle a raucous "I told you so."

A name out of the past will come back to the local theater—comparatively local, that is—on July 3, when the Cross Roads Players, over in Virginia, break out "Biography." The principal feminine role will be played by Izetta Jewell, jr.

Izetta Jewell, jr., needless to say, is the daughter of Izetta Jewell. Izetta Jewell, in case you had forgotten, or it goes back a little beyond your time, was the most popular leading woman the old Columbia Theater Players ever had—a popularity that carried over into Poli's Theater, after Loew's, Inc., had acquired control of the Columbia and installed motion picture entertainment on F street for the first time in the history of the Capital.

It should be a rich heritage that Miss Jewell will bring to the Cross Roads week after next.

We were saying something a while back of Katharine Hepburn and "The Philadelphia Story." Well, Miss Hepburn is not always so remote as the Shubert Theater in New York. On Sunday night, she, Burgess Meredith and a distinguished supporting group of Broadway stars will appear at a reception and radio broadcast scheduled for the Mayflower Hotel at 9:30 p. m. Preceding the broadcast, sponsored by the Washington Committee for Refugee Children, the audience will be entertained with songs by a celebrated Broadway star, whose name is kept a mystery. At 10:05 p. m., the radio drama, "Suffer Little Children," will be broadcast over a coast-to-coast network. Among the program's sponsors are the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D.; the Minister of Czecho-Slovakia and Mme. Hurban, Dr. Leo S. Rowe, Chancellor Joseph M. M. Gray, Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, Lady Bradford Leslie, Mrs. Isabelle S. Farrington, Miss Mae Helm and Washington's brilliant stage star, Helen Hayes.

So along comes another of those perennial announcements from the London office of the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company, heard not so long ago at the National. The Savoyards are playing London through July 15 and then vacation until August 28. After that they are booked solid through the provinces, as usual. But the important thing is that the D'Oyly Carters have got out a 48-page pictorial record of their 1939 season. This publication may be secured by mailing 3/6 each (3/10 post free) to The Sphere, 32-34 St. Bride street, London, E. C. 4. You figure it out, it's too far back in the book for me!

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, June 21.

GOV. CARL E. BAILEY of Arkansas brought 20 guests into the Stork Club the other night . . . They were served six magnums of champagne and steak suppers . . . Their table was decorated with unusual floral effects —and the entire scene was one of affluent contentment . . . The headwaiter approached Gov. Bailey and asked: "Anything else, sir?" Arkansas' First Citizen whispered something to him . . . "Oh, no, I'm sorry, sir," the headwaiter replied. "That's not quite possible. You cannot dance with Dorothy Lamour!"

LORETTA YOUNG, who arrived in New York secretly last week, will not be a Government witness at the Buckner trial. The Federal officials didn't subpena her. She came to testify for the defendant . . . All the Hollywood stars who are testifying in that case—Herbert Marshall, Frank Morgan, Miriam Hopkins, et al.—have had all their expenses, including transportation, paid by the Government . . . Kate Mayhew, the oldest actress on the English-speaking stage, is writing her autobiography. Her memoirs go back to the Civil War . . . Ruth Gordon, also is writing a book—about the diary she kept while she went to school . . . His friends say that Henry Luce, owner of Time magazine, has one ambition—to become Ambassador to China—because he was born there.

SENATOR ARTHUR CAPPER of Kansas was in New York to present the Josephine Snapp Award—the most important award in advertising at the Advertising Federation of America . . . Capper, whose thoughts still are concentrated upon the Wheat Belt and the historic problems of his community, made only two mistakes in presenting the advertising award . . . "I'm presenting the prize," he announced, "to the Woman Who Has Done Most for Agriculture—in 1839."

THE OTTO KAHN country estate at Cold Spring Harbor, which was purchased by the Sanitation Department's Welfare Fund, was offered last month as a gift to the United States Government, for use as a summer White House—but the President was unable to accept it . . . Ranny Weeks, the bandleader at the International Casino, will assume the juvenile role in the show there—replacing Bill Brady . . . Charlie MacArthur and Ben Hecht are taking instructions from a weight-lifter at 7 every morning. They'll take him along to Hollywood for the opening of their show . . . Elliott Rosevelt's family insists that he'll be loyal when the showdown comes.

JED HARRIS met Gene Tunney and questioned him about the famous knock down during the Dempsey fight in Chicago . . . "I really was unconscious," Tunney confessed . . . "What did you dream of while you were lying unconscious?" Harris asked . . . "I dreamed that I was resting on a great big bed, with silken coverlets. It was all so luxurious—really wonderful . . . I came to at the count of five" . . . "How do you remember that the count was five?" Harris asked . . . "Because then I remember hearing 'six,' " Tunney explained, "and I suddenly thought how long one second really is."

THE AMERICAN officials are preparing for this country's participation in the exposition to be held in Rome in 1942. Commissioner Theodore Hayes probably will be in charge . . . Dr. Smith Ely Jelliffe, the famed psychiatrist, who is over 70, submitted to a major operation at Mt. Sinai Hospital a few days ago—and left, completely recovered, in less than a week . . . George White's Scandals, which will tryout at the Garden Pier Theater in Atlantic City, will open in New York on July 31. Billy Reyes, the juggler who arrived in this country a short time ago, and then worked at the Strand, has been signed by White . . . Lee Tracy is planning to join the movie folk working in New York next September by appearing in a revival of "The Front Page."

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, June 21.—One more of David Selznick's troubles was settled today when he signed Laurence Olivier to play Max de Winter in "Rebecca." I can't think of any British actor who would be as good as Olivier, and that includes Colman, Aherne and Marshall, all of whom were discusseed for the Daphne Du Maurier novel. The brooding, sinister Heathcliffe of "Wuthering Heights" indicates just what a characterization Olivier will give as the harassed De Winter.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Apparently all Vivien Leigh's brave plans to return to England for a stage play will go aglimmering with the Olivier announcement this June morning, for she is now mentioned for the role of the wife opposite her very good friend, Laurence. Whether or not the dead wife, Rebecca, will be shown, is problematical. Director Alfred Hitchcock, master at melodrama, is trying to make up his mind if the suspense would be greater with only her shadow constantly in the background.

An interesting postscript to the Olivier signing is the word that he steps out of the lead of the Katharine Cornell play, "No Time for Comedy," immediately and you will never guess who goes into the part. Our old friend, Francis Lederer, who flew East tonight and will sign the contract with Miss Cornell. When the offer was first made to Francis, he thought he would have to refuse it, because he opens with Margo in "Seventh Heaven" at the Civic Theater in Chicago on July 2. But Kit Cornell, who is determined to have him as her leading man, will wait for him until he finishes the Chicago engagement.

May Robson, who told me about several of her funniest lines which were cut out of "Daughters Courageous," can steal a picture any time she feels in a thieving mood. She knows all the tricks of the trade, that gal, and yet she is always generous to the other members of the cast, helping them profit by her experience. May will be starred in "The Case of the Dangerous Dowager," one of Earle Stanley Gardner's detective stories. Claude Rains is the new Perry Mason, the suave lawyer who acts as his own detective. May left for New York tonight to see the shows and, while there, will make personal appearances at the Strand with "Daughters Courageous" which, take my word for it, is really a honey of a picture.

I was privileged to see "Music School" in the projection room with Jascha Heifetz and his wife, Florence Vidor, who is as attractive as when she was in the movies. I dropped by Sam Goldwyn's office while he and Willie Wyler were celebrating the actual signing of the contract over a bottle of champagne and the Heifetzes were there, waiting to see the movie, so I went along. What a treat for music lovers all over the world to hear Heifetz play the violin, with a charming supplementary story and an orchestra composed of amazingly talented children. You'll be entranced with Heifetz's playing and with the manner in which Sam Goldwyn has handled him. He has only a very few lines to speak, but so cleverly is the story built around him that he remains the star even though it is little Gene Reynolds who carries the burden of the acting.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Conrad Nagel returns next week, but Joan Fontaine is whispering to close friends that there will be no marriage. She and her sister, Olivia de Havilland, are building a new house; Greta Garbo broke herself up when she had to read the line "I want to be alone;" Freddie Bartholomew is forgetting his legal troubles in the joy of being a Boy Scout in Troop 59; George Brent, with only two days to go on "The Rains Came," is bedded with flu; Joan Crawford gave the Victor Hugo diners something to talk about when she walked in with Charlie Martin, wearing informal slacks; Jane Withers, whose arithmetic causes her sleepless nights, managed to get a passing grade; Robert Preston is taking ten days off to part with four wisdom teeth.

Dorothy Burgess, a niece of Fay Bainter and at one time well known on the screen, has returned to Hollywood for a visit; Lupe Velez's sisters are the attraction at the Bamba Clug fiesta; June Lang, who really grows prettier, in a confidential mood with Joe Pasternak at Marcels; Virginia Field, who went dark temporarily, has gone back to her blond tresses. Mrs. Helen Lloyd is celebrating Foxy Lloyd's recovery with a party in his honor tonight. He is Harold's dad; that was Louise Brooks dining with Lew Brice and John McClain with Paulette Goddard.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Crawford Works As Salesgirl

Characteristic of her enthusiasm for each new role she portrays, Joan Crawford revealed to Director George Cukor that she had made a thorough study of the manner of smart salesgirls in New York shops for her role in "The Women."

As a matter of fact, during her recent New York trip, she spent one whole day in the capacity of both salesgirl and model in Hattie Carnegie's New York Salon, and was clever enough to complete three important sales.

Little

Not often does the Little Theater revive a film so recently seen as "The Great Waltz," but, bowing to many requests, yesterday it brought back the Strauss musical.

Miliza Korjus makes her only American film appearance to date as one of the three stars and is heard in spectacular screen adaptations of the Waltz King's "Tales from the Vienna Woods," "Artists Life," "The Blue Danube" and the "Polka." Fernand Gravet is the composer and Luise Rainer is the girl he marries.

The story is concerned with the early struggles of the composer for recognition in his native Vienna. When a great opera singer takes an interest in him and brings him before an influential public, the young man is swept off his feet and away from his simple, young wife, Poldi. But the shy girl changes her tactics before it is too late and, when her husband is about to slip away with a brilliant singer, she quietly defeats the plan.

The voluptuous Miss Korjus, a powerful soprano, is brilliant as the opera singer and this characterization has won her a host of admirers. Luise Rainer, naturally, is the mouse-like Poldi and Gravet portrays the composer superlatively. Lionel Atwill, Al Shean, Hugh Herbert, Minna Gombell and George Houston are others in the cast.

The French Julien Duvivier directed the film and it is to his swirling groups and brilliantly conceived production numbers—particularly the "Tales of the Vienna Woods" sequence—that the film owes its principal effectiveness.

Palace and Keith's Launch Bills Today; Out-Door Attractions

"INVITATION TO HAPPINESS." Irene Dunne and Fred MacMurray costar at the Palace in this drama of a prizefighter and his lady. The romantic heiress meets the ambitious pugilist from the other side of the tracks in the giddy days of 1927 and the following decade tells their story. The two do not get along and a championship fight, with a novel outcome, brings the film to a climax. Charlie Ruggles, Billy Cook, William Collier, sr., and Marion Martin are in Director Wesley Ruggles' cast. A new Robert Benchley short, "Dark Magic," also is on the bill. Opens this morning.

Earle

"NAUGHTY BUT NICE." With Dick Powell as a young professor who thinks swing music is barbaric until he hears "Oomph Girl," Ann Sheridan, swing it, this comedy with music also features Gale Page in the role of a song writer, Ann's rival for the Powell romancing. Helen Broderick, Ronald Reagan, Allen Jenkins, ZaSu Pitts, Maxie Rosenbloom, Jerry Colonna and Luis Alberni are others in the cast. Owen McGiveney, the quick-change artist, presents his sketch, "Bill Sykes," on the stage, and the Coon Creek Girls, hillbilly singers who entertained the King and Queen at the White House, offer some of their songs. Billy Rayes, humorous juggler, and the 16 Earle Roxyettes complete the stage revue. Opens tomorrow.

RKO-Keith's

"THE SUN NEVER SETS." Douglas Fairbanks, jr., and Basil Rathbone play two brothers in the empire's civil service. Their family has long been servants of the crown, but Fairbanks refuses to live up to the family honor. The brothers are at odds until a national emergency in the form of a munitions man, Lionel Atwill, pits them together for the glory of the Union Jack. Virginia Field, Barbara O'Neil, C. Aubrey Smith, Melville Cooper and Mary Forbes are in the company. A new "March of Time" and Walt Disney's Beach Picnic" complete the bill. Opens this morning.

Capitol

"SUSANNAH OF THE MOUNTIES." Shirley Temple's latest film brings back this famous story of the old Northwest. Indians and railroad building surround the little star and, for the first time, she has a leading man, Martin Good Rider, a 13-year-old Blackfeet brave, born on a Montana reservation. He and Shirley perform an authentic Indian dance and Randolph Scott and Margaret Lockwood are featured. On the Capitol stage, "Oddities" is the title of the revue. Steve Evans, Walter and Paul Bryant and Pansy, the horse, are three of the novel acts. Betty Bruce, recently a hit in the New York musical, "The Boys from Syracuse," brings new taps to the Capitol stage and the "Playhouse Puppeteers" exhibit novelties of their own, besides introducing the other acts in an original manner. Opens tomorrow.

Metropolitan

"BLIND ALLEY." An escaped convict, hiding out, enters the home of a college professor, who pits his wits and professional experience as a psychologist against the killer. Chester Morris is the gunman and Ralph Bellamy the professor. Ann Dvorak, Rose Stradner, Joan Perry, Melville Cooper, Marc Lawrence and John Eldridge are in the supporting company. Opens tomorrow.

In Hollywood

—With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., June 21.—No matter what you are when you hit Hollywood, it's a cinch you'll be typed as something else. Take Elizabeth Patterson, who's never been married. She's mothered Janet Gaynor, Gable, Lombard, Davis, Crosby, Cagney, Colman — even the Dead End kids. And grandmammy to Randy Scott. Her latest is in "Our Leading Citizen" — a brood of ten.

HOPPER

Cecil Cunningham, who plays old maid secretaries, is married. Mary Boland, who plays Ruggles' wife, is a spinister. Halls McMahon plays gangsters but has a Ph.D from Fordham and never misses church on Sunday.

Karloff has a hobby—raises flowers, preferably pansies!

Lynne Overman, one of our best inebriates, is a tea sipper. Ditto Charlie Ruggles. Wally Beery, mean guy, is soft as a kitten's ear where his daughter, Carol Ann, is concerned. He even takes her to Earl Carroll's. J. Carroll Naish and Bela Lugosi are adoring fathers, too.

Basil Rathbone, essence of culture, usually plays villains on the screen. Brian Donlevy, one of our toughest, won't go on location without his wife. Eddie Robinson is "Little Caesar" to his fans, but to Gladys and little Mannie, sweetness and light.

And so it goes. You usually wind up playing anything but what you are—but it seems to get results. Why, they've even got sourpuss New Sparks reading fairy tales to the kiddies in "The Starmaker"—in Ned's own saccharin way!

Mike Curtiz and Bette Davis were discussing Elizabeth the Queen as a woman. "Trouble with her was," said Mike, "she had no Essex appeal." I watched Bette do the scene where Olivia de Havilland sings of young love, and Bette looks at herself in the mirror, then smashes it. She was wearing her carroty red wig, shaved eyebrows—you know she wanted to cut her lashes, even when she learned they wouldn't grow in again, but the studio fought that impulse of realism.

When she'd smashed everything in sight, she turned on Olivia with such a savage scream that when it was finished Liv said: "I made an awful mistake singing that song."

Bette said: "That's only the beginning, my pet. I've got to show "The Women" that Queen Liz was one of the!"

One of the most unique baby showers will be given this Sunday by Charles Ruggles. Two years ago he brought two young couples from the migratory camp near Bakersfield and gave them work. Three months ago one couple had a baby boy; yesterday the other couple had a son, too. Charlie invited his friends to gift his "new ranch hands" as he calls them.

Ty Power's foot is better but he almost severed a vein by dropping a five-gallon bottle of water while carrying it to his swimming pool. Coals to Newcastle, eh?

Deanne Durbin's first kiss in "First Love" may be from an unknown. They feel public would like it better that way. Yes, but how about Deanne?

Paul Muni is negotiating for a pineapple ranch in Hawaii. He doesn't look the beach type to me, either.

Columbia

"ROSE OF WASHINGTON SQUARE." After a two-week run at the Palace, this musical film of the last decade returns with its trio of stars, Alice Faye, Tyrone Power and Al Jolson. Al's climb to success as a singing star and Alice's romance with a handsome young good-for-nothing form the background against which the two singing stars revive a long list of old-time song hits. William Frawley, Joyce Compton and Hobart Cavanaugh support the stars. Opens tomorrow.

Trans-Lux

"INSIDE THE CAPITOL" is the leading short subject at the newsreel house, taking the public into many rooms open only to Senators and Representatives. "Chinook's Children" pictures Admiral Byrd's remarkable sled dog and his new family. Hollywood's horsey set is the subject of "Screen Snapshots" and "Lucky Pigs" is the color cartoon.

Mount Vernon

THE DRIVE-IN THEATER inaugurates weekly Saturday midnight shows beginning with this Saturday evening's "Roberta," the Irene Dunne - Fred Astaire - Ginger Rogers musical, which will be shown on the large open-air screen three times that evening. The popular musical opens its three-day run at the Mount Vernon tonight.

Glen Echo

THE AMUSEMENT PARK is hitting a new high with the closing of schools. The Picnic Grounds become a popular gathering place for parties. The Dodgem Rides and the Whip are favorites of the youngsters and the swimming pool is another well liked attraction. Lang Thompson leads his Swing Specialists for dancing in the Spanish ballroom.

S. S. Potomac

CHARLIE STRONG and his orchestra are on board the river steamer each evening when she leaves the Potomac River Line's wharf at Seventh and Water streets at 8:45 for a moonlight cruise. This Saturday night two surprise cruises are listed and on Sunday morning, at 9 o'clock, the steamer sails for an all day trip to Colonial Beach.

Wilson Line

THE CITY OF WASHINGTON cruises down the Potomac to Marshall Hall at 10 a. m., 2 and 5:30 p. m. and, with McWilliams' orchestra on board for dancing, makes a moonlight cruise each evening, except Monday. Beginning next week the line inaugurates Kiddies' Day at Marshall Hall each Monday and Friday, with half fares and cut rates for the children.

Roadside

"THE PIONEER'S DAUGHTER" is in its last week at the barn theater on the Rockville pike. On Monday evening, as its second offering of the season, the Roadsiders will present Tom Taylor's farce, "Still Waters Run Deep." George Farrington, Lansing Hall and Anne Ives head the company.

Cross Roads

"CANDLELIGHT" continues its engagement at the Hayloft Theater in Virginia for another week. Charles Grunwell, Austin Gattis, Doris Edwards, Buel Patch and Marjorie Henderson have the leads in this comedy by P. G. Wodehouse, concerning a valet who changed places with his master, with the latter's active aid.

Sylvan

THE SUMMER FESTIVALS sponsored by the Community Center and the National Capital Parks continue next Tuesday evening at the Sylvan Theater with the Columbia Light Opera Company in Sidney Jones' musical play, "The Geisha." Edith Hoffman Jones, Mildred Gleeson, Leila Stanley, Charles Moran, Florenz Hinz and Clarke Paulsen head the cast.

104 Delegates Pledged For Third Term, Is Claim

By International News Service.

The draft-Roosevelt-in-1940 movement was given fresh impetus yesterday when Senator Guffey (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, declared his State's 72 delegates to the Democratic National Convention will back President Roosevelt for a third term.

Guffey's pledge came fast on the heels of an announcement by Senator Smathers (Democrat), of New Jersey, that his State's 32 delegates will vote solidly for Roosevelt.

[The Associated Press reported from Harrisburg, Pa., that the Democratic Pennsylvania State committee, meeting yesterday at a slate-making session, adopted a resolution praising the policies of President Roosevelt and urging their furtherance, but omitted mention of a third term.—Editor's note.]

Logan for Roosevelt

At the same time, Senator Logan (Democrat), of Kentucky, while declaring himself opposed to a third term for any President, said that if President Roosevelt runs for re-election he will support him as a "regular Democrat" and predicted his re-election.

Secretary of Labor Perkins said in Denver that sentiment for a third term was increasing throughout the country but she declined to predict whether the President would run again.

The announcements by Guffey and Smathers were considered significant. Though Mr. Roosevelt has steadfastly declined to indicate whether he would be a candidate or whether he would accept the nomination if drafted, the draft drive appeared to be in full swing.

Smathers said that the President swept New Jersey by half a million votes in 1936, and "can sweep the State in 1940."

Oxford Gives Degree To Felix Frankfurter

Oxford, England, June 21 (AP).—Felix Frankfurter, associate justice of the United States Supreme Court, today received from Oxford University the degree of honorary doctor of civil laws. Lord Lothian, Ambassador-designate to the United States, also received a degree.

BACKACHE, LEG PAINS MAY BE DANGER SIGN
Of Tired Kidneys
If backache and leg pains are making you miserable, don't just complain and do nothing about them. Nature may be warning you that your kidneys need attention.
The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.
Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning shows there may be something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.
If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.
Don't wait. Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Japan And Neutrality

The United States Government is directing to Japan, thus far without conspicuous success, one note after another protesting against Japanese infringements of American rights and interests in China. But Congress remains deadlocked on the neutrality issue.

These two circumstances are by no means unrelated. The spectacle of Congressional confusion on foreign policy, such as is provided by the debate on neutrality, encourages Japan, as it encourages all other aggressor nations, to disregard the United States as a factor in their calculations.

It happens that Japan is extremely vulnerable to the kind of nonmilitary pressure which the United States could easily apply against her. More than half of all the strategic raw materials that Japan needs for the conduct of the undeclared war on China comes from the United States. And some of these supplies, scrap iron for instance, Japan would find it difficult to get from any other source.

One might assume, therefore, that Japan would be especially careful to avoid taking any action which the United States would deem destructive of American rights and interests. Almost the exact opposite has been the case. Japan has paid little or no attention to American protests. And she has been able to do so with assurance because of the legislative barrier placed in the way of retaliatory action.

At the moment, were a larger measure of discretionary power vested in the President, the effect of such action on Japan might be very salutary. The Japanese do not underestimate the strength and importance of the United States. That is left for overtimorous members of Congress. Neutrality legislation of the mandatory variety has become a fetish with them, to which they are determined to cling no matter what the ultimate consequences on our position in eastern Asia or elsewhere.

Short-Sighted Tactics

In an address before an alumni meeting of Brown University, Sumner Welles, Undersecretary of State, emphasized the folly of antagonizing the countries to the south of us by trying to restrict our purchases from them to a minimum.

The tempest aroused by the Navy's small purchase of Argentine canned beef provided a timely text upon which to hang the discussion. Mr. Welles' arguments were particularly forceful because he appealed to our own selfish interest in maintaining friendly trading relations with Argentina—a country that in the period from 1924 to 1938 bought nearly a half billion dollars more goods from the United States than it sold to us.

"Obviously," Mr. Welles says, "the return from these large sales to Argentina has gone to American producers, and to American labor, and has increased the purchasing power of both for domestic products." These are facts that should be self-evident. But they have not prevented us from antagonizing this good customer by imposing a disguised embargo upon Argentine meat products, allegedly for fear of the foot and mouth disease. Now, fresh insult has been added to a grievance of long standing by the enactment of legislation making it impossible for the Government to purchase food products from Argentina or other South American producers.

Thus, in order to propitiate a small group of American producers, whose meat products are essentially non-competitive, we are risking loss of the highly lucrative trade which we carry on with Argentina. Already our exports to that country have been sharply reduced, largely, no doubt, because of Argentina's shortage of foreign exchange.

Nevertheless, the Argentinians will naturally give first consideration to those countries that deal liberally with her products. When it is a case of cutting down imports in order to conserve limited supplies of foreign exchange, Argentina is not likely to forget that we have virtually banned her meat products and imposed high duties upon certain other of her chief agricultural exports.

Enlightened self-interest suggests that we must reform our methods if we really wish to cultivate and expand our trade with South America.

Fundamental Progress

Elimination of a serious injustice to Washington seems foreshadowed by the sweeping majority with which the Senate District Committee indorsed the Overton formula.

It is true that there has not been any convincing adverse criticism of this practical and equitable method of sharing the costs of governing the National Capital. But Washingtonians know that it is one thing to have logic and justice on their side and quite another to convince Congress of the fact. So the city is grateful to the Senate District Committee and hopeful that this fundamental aspect of the local fiscal problem is on its way to being settled for good.

From 1878 to 1922 Congress shouldered one-half of the cost of governing Washington, on the assumption that the country as a whole has as much responsibility for its Capital as do those who make their living here. Since 1922 the Federal contribution has been whittled away and, what is more important, the whole principle of Federal responsibility has been discarded. The result is not merely that Washington now pays 88 per cent of the bill, but also that by some Congressmen even the relatively trivial Federal contribution has come to be regarded as largesse to a persistent and annoying beggar.

This situation is palpably unjust, considering the very large proportion of local expenditure occasioned by Washington's function as the National Capital. But equally important is the appalling waste of time and energy, and the needless acrimony, involved in the annual endeavor to have Congress take a comprehensive view of the District's budgetary needs. Indeed the whole issue of modernization of local government has been seriously retarded by perpetual wrangling over the extent and basis of the Federal contribution.

If the Overton formula provides a solution for this wholly unnecessary problem, its sponsors will deserve the undying gratitude of city and Congress alike. And there is, fortunately, good reason to suppose that precisely this achievement will result from the formula.

Its basic assumption is that the Federal contribution must be tied to some definite and calculable base, which Senator Overton takes to be the current acreage of tax-exempt Government property as a percentage of the District's total area. Certain deductions are made from this proportion, all to the District's disadvantage. For instance only the excess of park area over the average in comparable cities is charged to the Government account. There is no question of returning to the old 50-50 proportion, which could with reason be called unduly generous to Washingtonians.

But nobody in Washington is asking restoration of the 1878 arrangement. Nobody argues that the Federal contribution should be raised even to the 29.1 per cent at which it stood when the lump-sum appropriations started in 1925. All that the District expects is that Congress will recognize the equity, and the necessity, of a formula whereby the national Government contributes as a matter of course a fair proportion of the expenses incurred by having its location here.

Students of the subject recognize that overdue improvement in local government is all but impossible until the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia are put on a permanent basis. That is why all other local taxation issues are rendered secondary by the Senate District Committee's adoption of the Overton formula.

Alibis For Squandering

The Senate conferees on the farm bill have succeeded in retaining an unbudgeted item of $225,000,000 for so-called farm parity payments. When the House voted last month against an allotment for parity payments, the economy advocates were greatly encouraged and interpreted the vote as a sign that the period of unbridled spending was coming to an end.

Unfortunately, these hopes were decidedly dashed when the Senate proceeded to approve a farm bill of record size, carrying between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000 of unbudgeted appropriations including the parity payments. It is now to be feared that when the conference bill is completed it will come much nearer the totals voted by the Senate than those of the House.

Here is another impressive object lesson of the utter recklessness of Congress in ignoring budgetary estimates and at one fell swoop more than neutralizing the effect of the cuts in relief expenditures. Neither the Administration nor Congress, indeed, appears to feel the slightest compulsion to keep within budget estimates when it suits the purpose of either to ignore them.

That is strikingly shown by comparing actual expenditures with original budget estimates over a period of years. In the fiscal year 1935, outlays were 18 per cent higher than estimates, 19 per cent higher in 1936, 26 per cent higher in 1937, and 32 per cent higher in 1938. This year it is believed that the discrepancy will again amount to as much as 30 per cent.

The Administration has scrapped budgetary plans whenever it chose to expand its spending program. Congress has been the culprit on other occasions, notably when it insisted upon passing the bonus bill. Congress, too, is habitually disposed to go beyond budget estimates in voting benefits for the farmer.

Thus there is always a ready excuse for repeated failures to stay within budgetary limits and to progress toward budget balancing. The Administration can always put the blame on Congress by citing its disregard of executive advice and Congress can retaliate with equally good effect.

The Manton Sentence

The maximum permissible sentence of two years' imprisonment and a fine of $10,000 has been imposed upon Martin T. Manton, former senior judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, found guilty of a conspiracy to obstruct justice by selling his decisions.

District Judge W. Calvin Chesnut, of Maryland, assigned by Chief Justice Hughes to preside at the hearings, was evidently chiefly concerned with the effect of the sentence upon public opinion. He stated that "in view of the nature of the case as disclosed by the evidence, even this maximum sentence may seem inadequate to some of the public." For that reason, he carefully explained why the Government presumably chose to try Judge Manton on the conspiracy charge, instead of indicting him for judicial bribery—a crime carrying much heavier penalties.

So far as Judge Manton individually is concerned, the punishment meted out seems sufficiently severe. Indeed conviction alone entailed irreparable loss of reputation in the eyes of honorable men. However, it is essential, for purely impersonal reasons, that stern judgment be passed upon a judge who has betrayed a "sacred trust."

The enormity of the Manton offense is emphasized by the "fortunate" fact that it is unprecedented in the whole history of the Federal judiciary. According to Judge Chesnut, the last equally conspicuous parallel case in the history of the English and American high judiciary is that of Francis Bacon, Lord Chancellor of England. He was deprived of his office more than 300 years ago for similar cause.

The shock to confidence resulting from the Manton disclosures will be greatly mitigated by the prompt sentencing of Judge Manton. Indeed if the public becomes convinced that no clemency, no special consideration, is to be shown any dishonest judge, however exalted his station, respect for our courts will actually be enhanced.

There is some temptation to gloss over the offenses of men holding office of public trust, on the ground that it is more important to maintain respect for the office itself than to apprehend wrongdoers. This is an easy philosophy, based on specious reasoning, which it would be extremely perilous for a democracy to embrace. To tolerate venality on the bench for such reasons is doubly dangerous. It would breed contempt for the law itself, in addition to doing grave injustice to those who appeal to the courts for aid.

The seriousness of the losses due to the deliberate miscarriage of justice resulting from Judge Manton's purchased decisions will never be known. Some idea of their magnitude is afforded by the fact that the judge handled thousands of cases during the 21 years he spent upon the bench. A case involving litigation over patent rights has just been reopened as a result of charges that the decision was influenced by loans to the judge. In that instance alone the losing parties allege that the verdict has cost them several million dollars.

Protection for the public does not lie in the mere apprehension and punishment of venal judges, but in the appointment to the bench of jurists of the highest intellectual and moral caliber. The Manton case emphasizes the importance of making merit alone the test of fitness for judicial office. That is the best possible safeguard against a repetition of the offenses that have brought disgrace to Judge Manton and simultaneously put bench and bar on the defensive.

Good Qualifications

The Board of Education has acted promptly in appointing Mrs. Velma G. Williams, colored civic leader, to fill the unexpired term of Mrs. Virginia R. McGuire, who resigned May 31. More to the point, it seems to have acted wisely, too.

Mrs. Williams is doubly familiar with educational problems. For ten years she served as a teacher in the schools of her native State of Mississippi, which must at least have been good training in how to make the best use of limited facilities.

And, as the mother of four sons now attending public schools in the District, the appointee has first-hand information of local needs, even beyond that furnished by her four years as president of the James Monroe Parent-Teacher Association.

"I am alarmed by the bathing suits the modern girls are wearing," declares a minister. It doesn't take much to alarm him.

Another thing that greatly retards the progress of man is that the peculiar design followed in his structure so aptly fits him for sitting down.

If nature is so resourceful in adapting the species to changing conditions, as evolutionists claim, why hasn't she provided man with earlids?

Deserving Tribute

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In The Post of June 18 you printed an article by "Diarist," in the nature of a biographical sketch of Mr. George H. Sweet, present personnel director of the United States Veterans' Administration, and in the final paragraph a statement is quoted from an anonymous source to the effect that "with his efficiency he keeps human."

That is a great and well-deserved tribute to an official who has proved its truth by his conduct of his office over a long period of years and under circumstances which test to the utmost those qualities of justice, equity, and humanity so necessary in a public officer charged with the responsibility of providing the Government with men and women best suited to the work on which they are to be employed.

There is, perhaps, no job in the Government service requiring the same high degree of poise, diplomacy, and impartiality as that of chief of personnel, with its complexities, perplexities, and human problems, its intimate acquaintance with the personal history, attainments, and ambitions of those who seek to make a career of Government work, and the necessity of allocating employes to the particular line of endeavor for which they are best fitted according to Government standards. Face Facts

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If, as "American" seems to think, the continuance of the so-called "neutrality" policy of the period just past would insure to our country "peace and happiness," such ease would, in the opinion of some of us, be at the cost of a loss of self-respect which is the penalty reaped by anyone who, regardless of the distress of others, seeks his own well-being.

Many of us have felt deeply humiliated since the last "neutrality" law, as we see it, gave notice to bully nations that they were free to go ahead; that we, the nation they had been most afraid of, would not interfere, since aggression against other nations would not offend us to the point of our taking any action.

The "peace and happiness" which "An American" claims to see as a result of isolation could not be ours for long, however determined we were not to help anyone else. A policy of ignoring duty to others undermines the character and a weak character eventually fails.

The "ball of nazism, communism and every other foreign element that is not constructive" had its speed greatly accelerated by the "neutrality" legislation of America. We cannot now undo the crimes that aggressor nations have committed since they gleefully learned that we would keep hands off. What we can do now is bravely and honorably to face conditions as they are, and while endeavoring to keep the peace for ourselves and others, remember that for individuals and for nations, duty is more important than the seeking of peace and happiness.

Dodging

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your paper is to be commended for its stand on the position of those Representatives who voted to tax everyone in the District except themselves and their employes.

The matter has broader implications which are worthy of consideration, particularly in view of the emphasis that is being put upon patriotism at this time. The roll call of the tax-dodging Congressmen includes many who are quite patriotic. Their mistake is like that of the father who beats his children because they do not respect him as a father has a right to be respected.

These actions do more to engender disrespect for democratic institutions than all the communists and fascists put together.

The subversive influence of seeing accredited Representatives betray the people's trust is greater than the sum and substance of the Dies committee's findings. I respectfully suggest the Dies committee investigate tax-dodging Congressmen.

Principles Of Democratic Taxation

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Washington League of Women Shoppers wishes to go on record as strongly behind Senator King in his efforts to retain the progressive features of the current District revenue bill now under consideration by the Senate District Committee.

It is a matter of the utmost importance that this committee be not misled by persons whose recommendations spring from their identification with special groups, and that a few simple and democratic principles be kept uppermost during committee deliberations. Among these principles we believe are the following:

Taxation should be based on the ability to pay. In general, this means an income tax. It certainly rules out retail sales taxes, no matter how disguised or how mixed up with other tax programs, in an effort to shift the burden from those who can afford to pay to those who cannot. Even as the bill stands, without exemptions and without modifications which would undoubtedly be desirable, it is greatly preferable to either of the above forms of taxation.

It is by no means the highest in the United States, as stated in The Post, and it does not touch incomes of less than $2,000 per year. Both the other proposed forms levy directly or indirectly on the incomes below this very low figure.

In this connection we should like to point out a fact which is well enough known, but which is in danger of being overlooked by the general public: Only about 30 per cent or less of the families in the District of Columbia have incomes above $2,000 a year. Seventy per cent, or more, are not in a position to pay any additional taxes whatsoever. The only alternative to an income tax is some sort of sales tax, disguised or otherwise, and this would constitute an intolerable levy on the very large number of families with incomes ranging from nothing at all to the $500, $600 and $700 a year families who make up at least a third of our population.

In the name of democracy as well as in the name of sound taxation, the Senate Committee for the District should turn its attention from the regressive and unfair provisions of the original House District Committee recommendations, which were so overwhelmingly rejected by the House as a whole, and should occupy itself instead with making what adjustments are necessary in the bill as finally passed.

Helping Hand

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I stood on a deck looking out across the sea when a tiny speck appeared on the far horizon. I waited and as it drew nearer I saw it was a ship carrying a cargo of human freight. A thousand forms were moving aimlessly about the deck, and wondering perhaps, if there remained somewhere on earth a spot for them, and if not, would they be forgiven if self-destruction sent them stumbling back to God.

Who are these people and of what crimes are they guilty that the judgment of man should sentence them to homeless exile and the civil laws of other lands refuse even a temporary haven? Is it because of the accident of birth—a race whose forebears gave to a world the interpretation of divine authority known as the Old Testament and whose texts are subjects for sermons delivered from every pulpit and formulated in prayers at the opening of all parliaments throughout Christendom today?

Do we, the democracies, stand at the crossroads and prate of the Golden Rule and offer stone for bread? These outcasts are our brothers and our sisters, old in wisdom, learned from experience and mellowed by time. They come not as a menace to society nor as a burden on the state, but as a people who have blazed the trails of progress from time immemorial.

Precedents have been suddenly broken and laws repealed over night to meet emergencies and if we are true to the principles of civilization which in itself is the eternal struggle to alleviate human suffering, is it not our inherent duty to lend a helping hand?

Dictaphone

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the June 12 issue of The Washington Post, under the heading "Brown Declines to Fight Over Dictograph Data; Hasn't Seen It," is a reference to dictaphone records.

If dictograph apparatus was used for this purpose then the designation "dictaphone records" is incorrect.

For your information, the word "Dictaphone" is the registered trademark of Dictaphone Corporation, manufacturers of Dictaphone dictating machines and accessories. Dictaphone dictating machines are commercial business instruments for recording and reproducing business dictation. They are not to be confused with several other types of apparatus used for evidence-collecting purposes.

The discrepancy between the heading and the reference in the first paragraph leads me to believe that there must be some confusion in the minds of your copy desk as to the difference between the two types of equipment.

Real Reason

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Phillips' column in The Post of June 21 was intended to be humorous, but actually he puts his acute finger on the real reason for our economic and social stymie.

In order for a democratically conceived but politically operated governmental machine to operate with a measure of success, its activities must be so simple as to be within the ready understanding and comprehension of the average citizen. We have so hedged the citizen with our multitude of laws, rules, regulations etc., only a few daring souls are disposed to move.

Rubber Plants

THE MOMENT I said it I could have bitten my tongue off. But a habit of two months' standing couldn't be dropped in a moment, even though through the excitement and relief something in the back of my mind reminded me that we were out of the Soviet Union now, and Manchuria was full of White Russians. I had called the waiter "Tovarich."

Everybody laughed. Perhaps it was a common mistake, or perhaps the waiters enjoyed hearing a Russian word, even an offensive one, after the Japanese of the residents and the babel of Trans-Siberian travelers.

We were sitting in the restaurant at Manchouli, the border station, exhausted with the effort of two customs inspections, two passport inspections and money changings, glad to be on motionless ground after eight days in the train, eager for food and, most of all, drink.

"Dvo pivo, Horosho, gospodin." The waiter grinned and brought the beer. Around the table a burst of chatter broke the tired silence that had gradually descended on us during the morning ordeal. The Harvard medical student and his wife, who had made the long journey second class, talked rapidly of friends they would meet in another two days in Peking and repeated to us hearsay advice about Peking hotels.

The Dutchman was holding forth in German to a dapper Chinese from Canton, whose only European language was French. Across the great plains of western Siberia, through the forested mountains around Lake Baikal and the half-desert half-swamp land eastward to the Manchurian line these two had chatted, the one in German, the other in French, with a perfect understanding born of quick wits and vivid gestures.

Outside the restaurant we could see the two young Germans, still dressed in their hiking shorts, pacing the track up and down beside the waiting train.

Unconscious of time or place, with never a word to friend or fellow traveler, the two fair-haired Goths silently pursued the daily ritual of health worship.

Only one face was missing: the sad Dane's. When we first saw him we had been struck by the apparent distress in his pathetic, pale-blue eyes and his rather too long gray hair sweeping back in disarray above his domed forehead. An air of tragic mystery, of tired despair, hung about him; and his quiet ways deepened the impression. He rarely talked, and then only of one subject; seemingly so trivial it must have hid deeper sorrows.

It was the rubber plants. At least he called them rubber plants; to me they looked more like aspidistra, or those drooping-leaved potted palms that crowd the lobbies of second-rate hotels. However, he lived in the Philippines, and I had never seen rubber growing, so I took his word for it.

At every station along the line we had seen these rubber plants, growing from great wooden tubs in front of the entrance. They were as standard as the station clock, which always showed Moscow time, even at the border where there was six hours difference; or as standard as the time-table painted on the station house wall, which read: "Express to Moscow, Monday and Thursday; express to Manchouli, Tuesday and Friday; local trains daily (when running)." They were as standard as the groups of peasants that hung about the station waiting for the train, knowing that neither time-table nor clock mattered, the train would come along eventually, and probably be full.

But it wasn't that haphazard schedule on which the trains ran, nor the poverty-stricken air of the waiting peasants, that offended the conservative Dane. It was the poor condition of the rubber plants.

"It's the Bolsheviks," he would say. "Nothing can grow in such a country, nothing is taken care of. Look at those seedy rubber plants. When I used to travel this way, before the war, they were magnificent, beautiful plants, as high as the station house."

We had to admit that the ugly, rather draggled clumps of dust-covered brown leaves didn't reach anything like that high; but I privately doubted that rubber plants could ever be magnificent or beautiful. I had not even noticed them till our Danish friend pointed them out, for I was more struck with the carefully tended flower beds, in which "Stalin" or "Lenin" was lettered in red geraniums against a green moss background, edged with white stones.

He shook his head sadly. "They are all slaves here now. In the iron grip of the Bolsheviks one cannot breathe."

Still flushed with enthusiasm for the new order that had been instilled into us in the last two months, we smiled respectfully at his gray hairs and wondered how he could be so blind. Then we would leave him to ponder on the sad fate of the rubber plants as the train drew slowly out of the station and seek out the Soviet interpreter to chat again about the many and wonderful things the Bolsheviks had done.

But here in the restaurant at Manchouli we wondered how the sad Dane felt now that he had left the iron grip of the Bolsheviks for the military rule of the Japanese puppet state. Suddenly we heard the notes of a violin.

There behind us, surrounded by an admiring group of Japanese soldiers and white Russian waiters, stood the sad Dane, with a violin produced from nowhere, playing a melancholy ballad slightly out of tune, a peaceful smile lighting his kindly, weak old face.

He stopped and saw us. "Ah, you see," he exclaimed triumphantly, "look at these beautiful rubber plants!" Then we observed for the first time the monstrous growths that shut out the light from the windows. "Here there is freedom; the iron grip of the Bolsheviks is gone."

And he returned to his violin, all his own griefs forgotten in the melody of an age-old, long-forgotten poet's sorrow.

Fair Enough

Unexplained Brutality

APOLOGISTS in seeking some explanation of the brutality of the Nazis in their own land, then in Austria and, now, in the country that was Czecho-Slovakia and never was German, sometimes try to attribute this conduct to the humiliation and suffering inflicted on a portion of the Germans by the French after the war. Hitler himself emphasizes the fact that they laid down their arms under a general promise that the peace would not be a vengeful peace and that general disarmament would follow. He takes the position that the Germans were tricked by their own trustful honesty of heart and could and would have fought on possibly to victory had they been wiser.

That argument conflicts with his claim that the army was betrayed by the treachery of politicians and Bolsheviks in the rear and with the opinion of those military leaders on the allied side who felt that Germany had cracked. They wanted to pursue the army into Germany and inflict on the cities and countryside, and of course on the people, some practical rough-house which would teach the Germans what it meant to give the party in a great war.

Kaiser's Army Changed Rules

THERE IS NO doubt that the French were harsh. They executed some German civilians, possibly for insufficient reasons, made the Germans salute their officers, deported many and used colored troops in the occupation. These Negroes, however, only recently had enjoyed carte blanche to kill or be killed by the Germans, so their employment in mere police work in the afterdays was recognition of their contribution to the victory.

With the French the color line is not a straight line; it meanders. And, anyway, in view of the present hookup between the pure Aryan Germans and the non-Aryan Japanese it is not certain, but remains to be seen, whether they speak from principle or merely from humiliation in resenting the employment of colored troops to lord it over people whom they had helped to conquer.

But certainly the French occupation never has been depicted as the wanton slaughter of helpless civilians which Belgium and France had suffered in the early days when the Kaiser's army was in full power. It is true, of course, that those were war days. Even in the war, up to that time at least, civilians were supposed to enjoy certain immunities. The Kaiser's army changed the rules.

Talk Of Atrocities Hushed After War

AFTER THE WAR there was so much counter-propaganda intended to cool off the hate that the mention of German atrocities, like the mention of Reds and their conspiracies in this country up to a year ago, was thought to be naive and unintelligent. This counter-propaganda went so far, in the interests of peace and hope for the world, that many German atrocities, unspeakably brutal slaughters of civilians and the needless burning and looting of towns after capture, some without local resistance, were almost rubbed out of Germany's history. Yet Hugh Gibson has written of a morning in Dinant when German troops drove the civilians into the streets, burned their houses and shot those who tried to run away. He wrote that the congregation was taken from the church on a Sunday morning and that 50 of the men were shot.

"All the civilians who could be rounded up were driven into the square and kept there until evening," he wrote. "About 6 o'clock the women were lined on one side and kept in line by soldiers. On the other side the men were lined up against a wall in two rows, the first kneeling. Then, under command of an officer, two volleys were fired into them.

Motherly In Contrast With German Troops

"THIS WAS ONLY one of several wholesale executions. There is no end to the stories of individual atrocities. The three youngest children of M. Wasseige (director of a bank who refused to open safes) were brought to the spot by German soldiers and compelled to witness the murder of their father and two brothers."

No doubt the harshness of the French did offend the Germans whom the French found dwelling in an unscarred country only a short motor ride from the devastation of their own land. This severity probably has contributed to the new hate which will boil into the new war one day.

But the French then were still in a fury, still seeing the contrast; but, even so, when they had the Germans in their power they were motherly by comparison with the conduct of the Kaiser's army.

Yet all that was a long time ago, and certainly the Czechs had no part in the French occupation or any atrocities that the French committed. But in their treatment of the Czechs the Germans have begun where the French left off and threaten to repeat any day the conduct of the Kaiser's army of 1914. It just might be that there is some fault to be found with the Germans.

Employer May Ask NLRB Poll

Madden Outlines 4 Major Changes In Board's Policy

By the United Press.

The National Labor Relations Board yesterday bowed to demands of Congress, business and labor and changed its rules in four major respects. The right of employers to ask for board elections when faced with rival claims of two bona fide unions for exclusive bargaining, was the most important change.

Employers have long contended they are helpless when put "in the middle" by the rivalry of the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and were faced with a strike or a boycott if they bargained with either group.

Madden Lists Changes

The changes were announced by Board Chairman Madden in a letter to Chairman Norton (Democrat), New Jersey, of the House Labor Committee, which is conducting hearings on proposed amendments to the Wagner act.

They will become effective as soon as they are put in final legal form and published in the "Federal Register" as required by law. They include:

Permitting employers to petition the board for investigation and hearing, where two or more bona fide labor organizations are claiming a majority, but neither petitions the board for certification.

Extending from five to ten days the present minimum waiting period between the issuance of a complaint of unfair labor practices and the beginning of hearings, unless the parties waive notice.

Requiring that bona fide labor organizations which are parties to contracts alleged to be made in violation of the law must be made parties to the proceedings affecting the contracts.

Requiring that labor organizations which are alleged to be company-dominated must be served with a copy of the complaint and notice of hearing, with consequent opportunity to apply for intervention in the proceedings.

Majority Clause Attacked

Meanwhile, before the Senate Education and Labor Committee yesterday David R. Clarke, Chicago, counsel for the Illinois Manufacturers Association, attacked the majority rule clause of the act and said that recent labor troubles in the coal and automobile industries are but "preliminary skirmishes compared to what is ahead of us."

If Congress adjourns without repealing the majority rule provisions of the act," he said, "Congress will find the industries of this country far more completely paralyzed than they are now when it reconvenes."

The American Federation of Labor made it plain that the rules changes did not lessen its demand for amendments this year, especially the A. F. L.-sponsored revisions to create a new board with five members, to change the unit rule, and to curtail board powers to invalidate contracts between employers and bona fide unions. A. F. L. General Counsel Joseph A. Padway hailed the changes, however, as "vindication and victory" for the federation.

La Follette Asks Income Tax Boost

the Senate meets today. Majority Leader Barkley added that he hoped to pass the tax bill before nightfall.

Harrison, who has supported some of La Follette's amendments in the past, is expected to oppose broadening of the pending bill to include income tax revision.

The Finance Committee chairman said the President has never formally recommended either broadening of the income tax base or middle-bracket increases.

"This is primarily a corporate tax relief bill, and I don't think we should open it up," Harrison said.

He pointed to the June 30 expiration date of $544,300,000 in nuisance taxes and $100,000,000 from the 3-cent nonlocal mail rate, both of which are continued another two years by the bill, as evidencing the need of speedy action on the bill as now drawn.

While there are other factors than taxes in the present business recession, Harrison reiterated his belief that elimination of the undivided profits tax and other tax deterrents should provide "psychological stimulus" to business to go ahead.

La Follette's income tax amendments introduced yesterday did not recommend any scaling down in the highest bracket surtaxes, although both the President and Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau recommended that subject be considered in conjunction with projected removal of exemptions from public security issues. The bill to wipe out security interest exemptions will be considered by the Ways and Means Committee next Wednesday, but will not be coupled with the surtax issue. Harrsion said the Senate, having completed hearings on the public security tax bill, "will be ready to go ahead on that as soon as the House is finished."

ing specifications, were to go into effect next Sunday. An amendment proposed by Representative Lea (Democrat), of California, and approved by Congress yesterday extends the date at which all food and drug products must wear revealing labels until January 1.

Since major provisions of the act do go into effect on June 25 and since the appropriation of the Food and Drug Administration has been increased by $640,000, all is not gloom in that section of the Department of Agriculture. The cosmetic drives, which have included a complete clean-up of the dangerous eyelash paint market, and most of the other teeth of the bill will clamp down with relentless speed.

Marshall, with Jess Allen and Kenneth Harvey, will make a 75-mile pack train trip and then attempt to scale 10,000-foot Mount Doonerak, never conquered by man.

D. C. Man Blames Squalus Ventilator

called the hero of the tragedy by his commander, Lieut. O. F. Naquin, told how he disconnected the craft's short-circuited batteries before they could burst into flame.

A sharp fall in voltage reading told him the batteries were short circuited, he said, and with a flashlight went into the battery "tank."

"My first thought was that the control room was flooded," he said. "I found the battery connections very hot and vapor coming off them. I had some difficulty getting one battery disconnected because of an 8-inch arc of electricity. Then I realized the serious danger of fire."

Ventilators Called Weak

Lieut. William T. Doyle, jr., of Baltimore, executive officer of the Squalus, supported the testimony of his commander that the virtually unprotected ventilating systems of this Nation's submarines were their greatest weakness.

Almost simultaneously he gave new indication that failure of the air induction system was the cause of the accident.

"They probably would be the first things to be ruptured in case of a depth bomb explosion or in the case of any unusual happenings or accident outboard," he told the court.

Disaster struck the Squalus stealthily, according to Doyle's testimony, when the "Christmas tree" was green. In submarine parlance this meant that all lights on the tree-shaped indicator board showed green rather than red and gave false assurance that the submarine was ready to dive.

Officers Were Ready

In addition to the story told by the indicator board, Doyle said, Lieut. John C. Nichols, of Chicago, came to him from the forward compartment, and Ensign Joseph W. Patterson, of Oklahoma City, from the after compartment and reported to him orally that their sections were in readiness. This, too, confirmed the testimony given yesterday by Lieut. Naquin.

After reporting, Patterson returned to his station and perished.

"Then this definitely establishes," asked Naquin, in cross-examination, "the fact that communications were not faulty with these two compartments as late as ten seconds after the first blast (a diving signal) had been sounded?"

"A very definite indication," Doyle replied.

"Interlock" Recommended

"Assuming that the vessel was flooded through the high induction valve would this accident have been avoided if there had been an interlock between the ballast vents and the high induction valve?" Doyle was asked.

"If an interlock was so rigged that it would prevent the opening of the ballast vents until the high induction valve was closed it certainly would have given a further indication that all was not right with the outboard induction," he replied.

Doyle said that when the submersible dived he was directly in front of the indicator board, and added, "we had an all green board." He said the lights remained green even down to 50 feet and just before they began to take on water.

Valve Was Tested

Lieut. Robert N. Robertson, of Quanah, Tex., engineering, construction and repair officer, following Doyle to the stand, testified he had made two tests of the operating gear and that the induction valve was working perfectly.

Asked if he had any recommendations, Robertson suggested a pipe should be run from the induction valve to the diving officer so that with the first trickle of water he would know that something had gone wrong.

Lieut. Nichols, who served as torpedo, gunnery and communications officer on the stricken ship, asked by the board for suggestions, recommended "quick-closing valves on the engine induction, in the engine room, valves which would be operated from the control room," and "some visual means of sighting the induction valve to make certain it is closed."

Another Proposal

He said he was impressed by the difficulty the first man who emerged through a submarine's escape hatch wearing a Momsen lung would have in attaching an ascending line. He recommended that the first man wear a diver's heavy boots to overcome his natural buoyancy and that a pad eye be placed on deck to facilitate attaching the line.

"You evidently believe the loss of the Squalus was due to the induction valve?" Nichols was asked.

"I believe the trouble had to do with the induction valve," he replied.

Chief Torpedo Man Roy Campbell, of Omaha, Nebr., said he first noticed water in the control room "when it came down on top of me." The water stopped quickly, he added, when the bulkhead valves were closed.

Campbell said of the Squalus: "The way the boat operated and handled and made its dives was far superior to any boat I have ever been on."

Alfred L. Prien, San Francisco, machinist's mate and hydraulic manifold operator in the control room, whose duty was to close the discussed high induction valve, said he had pulled the induction valve lever to close the valve and that the light on the board turned from red to green, indicating it did close.

Charles C. Kuney, of Tulare, Calif., yeoman, second class, who had charge of the telephones in the control room, said messages came to him that the ship was rigged for diving and that after the dive the next message said the engine room was flooded.

New Submarine Launched

As Isaacs completed his testimony and the court adjourned for the day, naval officers and their families walked to a navy yard way to attend the private launching of one of the newest additions to the undersea fleet—the submarine Sea Raven, similar in most respects to the ill-starred Squalus.

As the Sea Raven slid down the ways, word came ashore that Navy divers, 15 miles off Portsmouth, had looped a thin wire beneath the Squalus' stern as one of the preliminaries to raising her to the surface.

New Deal Tide Ebbs

By Mark Sullivan

Surplus Tax Killed

REPEAL OF the undistributed surplus tax is a tide mark. It is a clear sign of change of direction. It shows that the New Deal tide reached its peak some time ago, and is now in ebb.

It is not quite accurate to say this tax was "repealed." It, with several other taxes, was coming to an end next January 1. What the House has done is, vote to renew the other taxes—but let the undistributed surplus tax die. Neither is it quite accurate to say the vote against the surplus tax was 358 to 1. The measure which the House acted upon included several other tax provisions. A straight roll-call confined to the surplus tax would have revealed much more than 1 vote in favor of it, yet not enough to matter.

However, all this is immaterial. The clear fact is that the surplus tax is dead, and dead by the overwhelming will of Congress. If we review the history of this tax, the significance of its death is unmistakable.

The undistributed surplus tax was first enacted in early 1936. It was a darling of the New Deal, and a cornerstone of "planned economy." It compelled all business corporations to pay out to their stockholders practically all that they earned each year. It compelled this by means of a punitively heavy tax on any surplus they kept in their treasuries.

Surplus Tax Netted But Little Revenue

FOR THE MEASURE, and for calling it a "tax" measure, there was one slight justification. It did bring a small amount of additional money into the Treasury, but only some $20,000,000 a year, about one-third of 1 per cent of the whole Government revenue. And the surplus tax measure did end a very small amount of tax avoidance practiced by a very small number of stockholders of small, family-owned corporations.

For the real purpose of the surplus tax was to give Government greater power over business, to enable Government to absorb more of the field of business. The purpose was to increase—indeed to perfect—the policy of planned economy. I say this was the "purpose." It is never possible to say positively what is in another man's mind. As to any New Deal measure, it is never possible to say surely to what degree there was conscious intention to destroy the system of privately owned business and bring collectivism—and to what degree there was mere ignorance of the consequences a measure would have. Many New Dealers, because they are completely theoretical and utterly inexperienced, sincerely think that certain measures can be pressed down on private enterprise—when in fact the measures would destroy private enterprise.

In any event, this can be said fairly: If any intelligent radical wished to destroy the system of privately owned business, the undistributed surplus tax would serve that purpose. It left corporations without cash in their treasuries, and therefore subject to bankruptcy the first year business was bad. To small businesses, the surplus tax was plain murder. Small business can only keep alive and grow by having surplus profits, and "plowing back" the surplus into expansion. Had the surplus tax existed in 1894 and since, Henry Ford would still be making automobiles in a one-room shack.

New Dealers Ignored Predicted Results

ALL THIS was pointed out in advance, when the surplus tax measure was sent to Congress. But the New Dealers insisted. They declared the critics were mere "economic royalists." Congress, then in its "rubber-stamp" era, passed the measure.

Presently the predicted consequences became facts. Presently also, Congress ceased to be a rubber stamp. In early 1938, Congress, while keeping the principle of the surplus tax, reduced the rate of it to a negligible figure, 2½ per cent. That irritated Mr. Roosevelt. He strongly criticized Congress. Had the act stood alone, he would have vetoed it. He could not do that because the act contained several other tax provisions that were imperatively necessary. But Mr. Roosevelt, to show his irritation, refused to sign the measure—he let it become law without his signature.

All this history is comprised within 3 years and 3 months. The surplus tax measure was first sent to Congress March 3, 1936. The death of it by action of the House occurred last Monday, June 19, 1939.

Somewhere within that 3 years and 3 months was high tide of the New Deal. The precise hour of a high tide is not recognizable until some time after ebb has begun. (In this case, historians may recognize that the hour of high tide was 12 o'clock noon, February 5, 1937—the hour Mr. Roosevelt sent his court measure to Congress.)

New Deal Shows Strong Ebb Tide

THAT THE EBB is under way, quite strongly, is shown by various actions of Congress. The measure which reduces the scope of WPA, puts restrictive regulations upon it and overhauls it generally was passed by the House last Saturday by 373 to 21, though many of its provisions were strongly disliked by the New Deal and by the President.

Again, a measure revamping the social security law was passed by the House by 361 to 2. While this measure was not resisted by the President, it was in fact a belated and partly unwilling concession to those critics and opponents of the New Deal who had pointed out that certain provisions of the original social security law would have been certain death to the system of privately owned business.

What is going on is a strong ebb from the peak of the New Deal tide. In some cases, like the undistributed surplus tax, New Deal measures are discarded completely. In other cases, parts of New Deal measures are retained, other parts discarded.

On Being Neutral

By Barnet Nover

Pious Beliefs And Tough Realities

THERE WAS a time when war was almost wholly a struggle between professional armies.

The people living behind the lines were, even in those days, not unaffected by the activities of the fighting forces. Wars, then as now, imposed added burdens on the people and diverted some of them, at least, from their normal routine of living. For the average individual, however, war's impact was limited and indirect.

This is no longer true. Modern war is a beast of insatiable appetite. It absorbs all the energies of a nation. The armies in the field are but the spearpoint of an effort that reaches out to every farm and factory and involves every man, woman and child, all available resources and every ounce of strength. War's impact is now direct and unlimited. War today is in every sense totalitarian.

ALL THIS is, or should be, obvious to those who have been watching events unroll in Europe and the Far East. Yet the implications of this state of affairs are by no means universally understood.

Take, for example, the dispute which is now raging in and out of Congress on the question whether the United States should impose a mandatory embargo on arms, munitions and implements of war to combatants.

The present neutrality act contains such a provision. The bill approved by the House Foreign Affairs Committee does not. Neither does the Pittman bill which the Senate Foreign Relations Committee is about to consider.

Should either of these measures be passed, therefore, the outbreak of war in Europe would not automatically cut off the sale of arms to combatants. Such sales would be placed in the same category as the sales of any other commodities that enter into international commerce and be subject to whatever rules are laid down to govern trade with nations at war.

OPPONENTS of the Bloom and Pittman bills argue that these measures are unneutral since they would, in practice, favor Great Britain and France which control the seas, and work against Germany and Italy, which do not.

Permitted to sell arms to all and sundry, it is said, the United States would, in actuality, find it possible to sell such necessities only to the Anglo-French bloc and would thus incur the hostility of the other side.

In the long run, say the advocates of a mandatory arms embargo, this means being drawn in the next war as the sale of munitions to Great Britain and France between 1914 and 1917 meant involvement in the last. To avoid such involvement, it is argued, the sale of arms, ammunition and implements of war to all belligerents must be stopped the moment war breaks out.

IT IS OBVIOUS that such individuals take no stock in the theory held by a considerable number of Americans that if there is a war in Europe, American interests would probably be far better served if Great Britain and France won than if those nations were defeated.

It is equally apparent that they take no stock in the argument that a neutrality measure of the kind which the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House has approved might prevent war by making it clear to the totalitarian powers that they would have to reckon with the United States as a potential supply base for their enemies.

And, last but not least, it is clear that the advocates of an automatic arms embargo deem it far more reprehensible for the United States to sell arms and munitions and airplanes to belligerents than to sell them scrap iron and cotton and copper and gasoline and food.

ACTUALLY, of course, a nation at war can no more get along without such commodities than it can without arms and munitions.

There is today only a distinction of degree rather than kind between arms and munitions and the material out of which those arms and munitions are made; between, say, the bombing plane and the high octane gas without which it cannot leave the ground; between the bomb which destroys innocent men, women and children in civilian centers and the scrap iron without which these bombs cannot be manufactured.

In other words, the distinction between arms and munitions and strategic raw materials which play an equally important role in warmaking is emotional rather than practical.

If it is reprehensible for the United States to serve as an arsenal for one set of belligerents it is no less reprehensible for us to serve as a reservoir of those innumerable commodities which nations at war must have if they are to continue fighting.

On the other hand if there is nothing wrong in selling scrap iron and gasoline and motor trucks and cotton, the same applies to arms and munitions. Yet there is not a single member of the House nor of the Senate, including the most vehement proponents of mandatory neutrality, who has proposed that once war breaks out the United States ban all sales to belligerents.

That would be logical. But it would not be practical politics. Yet if the present embargo on arms is kept on the statute books and no embargo is imposed on essential war materials other than arms, munitions and implements of war, the United States would still, very largely be favoring the side which has control of the seas.

Your Figure Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Average Woman Burns 16 Calories Per Pound of Weight

IT HAS been estimated that an "idle woman" uses slightly less than 1,400 calories a day—which is something to think about! Anyone using so few calories would practically have to live on a reducing diet to keep her weight under control!

Just what is meant by an idle woman is not quite clear. Perhaps it means a lady who sits around with just an occasional flutter of a flowered fan for exercise. There can't be many like that! Many women work nowadays, but most types of work do not use nearly as many calories as might be imagined. If you take on weight it's because your intake in food exceeds your output in energy.

Calories Burned

Pursuing this matter of weight, we find that the average woman uses around 16 calories per pound of body weight per day. But with practically no exercise the most she could hope to use would be around 14 calories per pound per day. Let's assume that you burn only 14 calories per pound and that your normal weight is 120 pounds. Multiplying 120 by 14, we get 1,680 calories—your maintenance allowance per day. You gain weight by taking more than the 1,680 calories you can burn.

And what if you have already gained too much weight? Then your calorie intake must be cut to a reducing allowance—to one-third less than your maintenance, or 1,100 calories per day. On that restricted number you should be able to average a weight loss of 2 pounds per week. All this figuring is done on the basis of your normal weight. The excess fat does not participate in the work of the body and is not considered in estimating your reducing allowance.

Three-Meal Basis

The average woman who burns 16 calories per pound of body weight per day would have a maintenance allowance of 2,000 to 2,400 calories per day—plenty, for three good square meals. For reducing purposes, this allowance would be cut down to 1,200 or 1,500 calories daily.

As you see, reducing is a simple problem in subtraction. First you estimate your calorie requirements according to whether you are an "idle woman," or take very little exercise, or get an average amount. Then reduce by limiting yourself to two-thirds your normal maintenance calories.

When you diet, you cut your calorie intake so that you spend more calories in energy than you get in food. By taking more exercise, you can step up your calorie expenditure. The combination of the two methods makes a perfect reducing program.

Back to Nature

"Yes, Gracie's getting ready to go to camp again . . . Oh, yes, it's a perfectly wonderful thing for a girl. All that simple, primitive life, you know, and getting away from all this superficial civilization."

"What, Gracie? . . . No, I havn't seen your soap box . . . Now you know nobody would have taken it . . . The wash cloths? They're on your bureau . . . Well, I'd think half a dozen would be enough . . . What's the matter with the towels? . . . Too skimpy? . . . Well, get some of those big ones of your father's out of the linen closet."

"We've just been living in a madhouse the last few days—oh, I wish those laundry people would come! You see, she's leaving Monday. Well, anyway, the thing I say about camp is this—it teaches girls discipline . . . Yes! And then they learn to be self-reliant—do things for themselves—Excuse me, please?"

"What did you say, Gracie? . . . I don't know where your tennis press is . . . Well, where did you put it last? . . . Now WHO could have taken it . . . No, I haven't seen anything of your canteen . . . Well, you'll just have to look for it . . . No, I didn't touch your duffle bag . . . No, I'm busy now."

"No, no, don't go! I'm not doing a thing on earth but sewing on name tapes. Yes, they have to go on every stitch of clothes she has. Yes, I've been at it for two days. She started to do it herself, but she was making such a mess of it, I told her I'd do the clothes if she'd do the bedding . . . She simply loves to go to camp, but all this detail bores her so. She's awfully nervous—say, wait a minute . . ."

"Well, what is it? . . . The indelible ink? It's in your father's desk, but what do you want it for? . . . Oh, I wouldn't mark the pillow cases with INK! . . . No, why don't you sew on the name tapes? . . . Oh, all right, but be careful!"

"You know, I really think it would be good for all of us to go off to camp somewhere, just to get away from things . . . and not have to worry about clothes—oh, say, that reminds me! I mustn't forget to call up about her jodhspurs . . . Yes, she says she needs a new pair of washable ones . . . and she's really got to get some more camp shirts . . . and two new bathing suits and shorts and —Wait! Is she calling?"

"Yes, yes! I can hear! . . . What is it? . . . The ink? Where did it spill? . . . On the bedspread! . . . Oh, that lovely yellow bedspread! . . . Yes, all right, I'm coming. Pardon me a minute, will you . . ."

"Oh, yes, I suppose it'll come out, but I shouldn't have let her use the ink. It does make a lot of trouble, getting her off, but it's such a good, wholesome experience for her, and then she gets away from the movies and all the other excitement—oh, that reminds me!"

"Say, Gracie, don't forget the books on that school reading list! . . . Silas Marner? . . . No, I don't know where it is. Now don't forget Quentin Durward . . . Yes, but the teacher said you had to . . . Well, what did you want with the book your father had? . . . No, you simply cannot take any detective stories to camp!"

"Oh, yes, I'm almost through, but I don't see how on earth she's going to get all these things in her steamer trunk. The whole family had to sit on it last year to get it shut. Oh, it's a big problem getting her off, but it's all such good training for her, learning to take care of her things—Wait, there she is again!"

"What, Gracie? . . . Your uniform? . . . What's the matter with it? No! . . . Not moths . . . Well, how did they get to it? . . . No, not ruined! Of all things! Oh, yes, I'm coming!"

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—So now it's summer, hey? Well, then, what were all those other hot days? . . . Poor Marlene Dietrich! Here she was, all happy with her new American citizenship, squired by devoted gents, and then things turned sour. First she turned up at the Monte Carlo wearing the precise gown which titivated the fair form of Mrs. Dudley Roberts, jr.—one of those things that will happen. Then, shoving off on the Normandie, Uncle Samuel cracked down with a huge income-tax claim. Since she hasn't been earning a smooth dime lately, this was a sad blow to the new citizen. I wonder if she still fondled her first American passport when the canoe sailed at last?

Aunt Alice is trouping this spring, all right. One-night stands in Cleveland, Reading and, last week, Rochester. Next stop, Pittsburgh. Spouse Len Hall squawks that he carefully avoided hitching up to an actress in his days as a drama critic—and now he seems to be involved with a road company after all. But he's happy, for his sister Emily is visiting us from Chicago, where she adorns the advertising business.

ADD HATLESS GIRLS—Julie Haydon, the slender little blonde who was a sensation in "Shadow and Substance" a year ago . . . Dropping into the tiny bar of the Algonquin Hotel the other day (for pineapple juice, of course.) Hall and I ran spang in a whole passel of writers on the movies—pretty Katie Best of "Stage;" Loretta King, who reviews films for a local paper as "Kate Cameron;" Bernard Sobel, authority on New York night life and now a plush-lined press agent, and Frederick James Smith, picture critic whom the spouse succeeded as managing editor of "Photoplay" a decade back. And what did we all gab about? "Shop," of course, emphasizing the strange antics of Hollywood people. None of the juicy bits ever see print, of course.

LET A Grade A royalty, or even a nobility, turn up here, and the ladies all look for resulting "style trends," and always find one. Now it is the dainty parasol, as carried by Queen Elizabeth in the Washington peerade. First to be photographed with one here was Mrs. Orson D. Munn, also famous for her amusing hats. She was snapped at a beach club with her tiny bumbershoot.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Bored and Baffled, Brilliant College Graduate Asks: 'Where Is My Niche in Life? How Can I Find It?'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Three years ago I graduated from college with a high scholastic record, fully expecting to get a job, settle down and justify my parents' expectations concerning my "brilliant future." But in my native town (in Pennsylvania) there wasn't any suitable opening. Oh, I worked —a couple of weeks here and there, but nowhere did a permanent job seem to exist.

Then I fell in love with, and became engaged to, a man my parents detested, for some reason I've never discovered. Although I was tempted to yield to his desire for us to live together during his college vacations, I didn't. But the emotions involved opened my eyes to another aspect of life. Shortly afterward, I broke the engagement. Between two jobs at NYA Resident Schools, in different parts of the country, I became engaged to another man, chiefly because my parents liked him immensely but also because I wanted someone to take care of me. I broke that, too, after he got me into some financial difficulties.

A year ago I came to Washington to take a job as nurses' aide, because I couldn't stand it at home, living with my parents' extreme disappointment at my failure to land either a promising job or a man. Now I find myself no further along. I have no ambition toward anything. There is nothing I want to do that I can do. The various tests I took at the District Employment Center show that only 1 per cent of the applicants examined here have a higher intelligence rating than I. But what good is intelligence, if one can't use it constructively?

I want a husband and home and children. But how can they be obtained, if men either bore or disgust me? My sense of humor is disappearing almost as fast as my self-confidence. I am afraid even to try anything, now. Religion hasn't helped substantially. What can I do to overcome this sense of frustration and helplessness? Where is my niche in life and how am I going to find it? What am I to do about me? Sincerely yours,

C. E. C.

Youth Forearmed

DEAR C. E. C.: On February 11, on the book page of this newspaper, there was published an article entitled "Youth Forearmed," which called readers' attention to "a book on vocational guidance, prepared in a novel manner and possessing the paramount virtue of filling an obvious need." The book under discussion was, "The Promise of Tomorrow," written by Walter E. Meyer (director of the Civic Education Service) in collaboration with Clay Coss.

These men, the reviewer tells us, "had primarily in mind the requirements of the boy or girl who is deciding what line of work to follow. The outstanding characteristic of 'The Promise of Tomorrow' is its adroit blending o, three elements which personnel management too often arbitrarily isolates. Mr. Meyer and Mr. Coss frankly recognize that occupations cannot be separated either from their general social and economic background, or from the individual character qualifications of the worker, no matter what the field of his or her endeavor . . .

"In its synthesis of the job, the individual and the times lies the unusual value of the study . . . Adult readers, remembering the confusion of mind with which—unless extremely lucky—they faced a choice of vocation, will feel regret that no similar guide was available to them. And parents, anxious to save their children the worries and blunders they experienced, will do well to bring 'The Promise of Tomorrow' to the attention of any boy or girl now wrestling with the grievous problem of what he or she shall do to make a living."

The reviewer goes on to say that "the appeal of the book is heightened by the charm of the writing, the mellow, sensitive, helpful philosophy of life which permeates its pages. Even if the reader knew nothing of Mr. Meyer's educational experience, he would recognize here the work of a truly great teacher—sympathetic, tolerant, courteous and stimulating—able to reduce to the confines of the printed page that power of leadership which characterizes the pedagogue at his infrequent best . . ." In conclusion, the reviewer remarks that Mr. Meyer, in this volume, "has indicated (to parents) how to avert that constant rebuke, voiced implicitly or explicitly by each rising generation to its elders—'Why didn't you tell men that in time?'"

If you are sincerely interested in finding your "niche in life," thus overcoming that "sense of frustration and helplessness," which indubitably stems from the fact that you "have no ambition toward anything," I suggest that you explore this "Promise of Tomorrow" and follow the sign posts it offers you. As you say, "What good is intelligence, if one can't use it constructively?" And certainly you are not using your intelligence constructively, so long as you follow the lines of least resistance—letting things happen to you rather than exerting yourself to bring certain other and more desirable things to pass.

If the men you are meeting today "bore and disgust" you, it is probably more your fault than theirs. The person who has not found his niche in life, nor one compelling purpose toward the accomplishment of which all his energies are consciously as well as unconsciously directed, usually does react with boredom and disgust—even as you—to every aspect of his social situation. The wisest thing "(you) can do about (you)" is to study, carefully, the book aforementioned, and, with its help, chart a straight course toward some realizable goal which offers an appropriate target for your particular set of qualifications. And you might take a draught, from time to time, of the gallant, inconquerable philosophy of life so magnificently expressed in Henley's "Invictus." M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Beefsteak Pie Is British Dish

By Martha Ellyn.
The Post Food Editor.

THE ROAST BEEF of Old England is justly famed all over the world. The Beefsteak Pie is also a national English dish of excellence and when properly made is delicious. It is equally good eaten hot or cold.

Beefsteak Pie

Cut 1 pound of lean beef into slices about ½-inch thick, and arrange them around a pie pan. In the center put ¾ pound of potatoes, either cut in thick slices or shaped into small balls, and sprinkle with 1 tablespoon of chopped onion, and a pinch of chopped parsley. Season with salt and pepper and add sufficient stock or water just to cover the meat. Cover with either puff pastry or short crust, press the edges down firmly, moistening the pastry slightly, decorate with pastry cut out in fancy shapes, make a slight opening in the center of the pie, brush over with beaten yolk of egg, and bake in a slow oven for about 2½ hours.

Alice Tuckerman Becomes Bride Of Capt. R. H. Williams at Cathedral

Crisp White Uniforms and Glittering Decorations Add Note of Glamour To Colorful Ceremony Here

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor

CRISP WHITE UNIFORMS, set off with gold buttons, decorations, and glittering swords added a special note of glamor to an outstanding wedding ceremony yesterday when Miss Alice Noel Tuckerman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman, became the bride of Capt. Robert Hugh Williams, U. S. M. C.

With the bridegroom's father as one of the officiating clergymen, three of the bride's sisters among the attendants, and almost everybody still in Washington witnessing the ceremony, the event further was enhanced by the trim uniforms worn by the bridegroom, best man and ushers, all of whom were from some branch of the service—Marine Corps, Army or Navy.

Wednesday was "the best day of all" for many a couple in Washington yesterday as weddings ran away with the social spotlight. While this nuptial service was taking place in one part of the Washington Cathedral, the Bethlehem Chapel was the scene of another, that of Miss Dorothy Lou Ellen Howard, of Rockville, Md., and John Phillip Engle, of Gaithersburg. In several instances, guests invited to one found themselves witnessing the other before they realized they had entered by the wrong door.

THE GREAT CHOIR of the Cathedral was the setting for the Williams-Tuckerman wedding at which the bridegroom's father, the Rev. J. Jenkins Williams, of Waukesha, Wis., and the Rev. Joseph E. Williams, of St. John's Church, Bethesda, read the nuptial vows. Dean Noble C. Powell pronounced the benediction.

Shortly after the appointed hour—4 o'clock—the first strains of the wedding march sounded in the vaulted nave, and presently the ushers appeared at the north transsept, followed by the bridesmaids, the maid of honor, and the bride, who entered with her father.

She was gowned in a period model of white net over satin, fashioned with a very full skirt, long sleeves tight to the elbow and then puffed to the shoulder. Her tulle veil was held to her dark hair with a cornet of orange blossoms and small lilies, and she carried a bouquet of white orchids and lilies of the valley. A diamond pendant that had been worn by her mother and hanging on a gold chain that had belonged to her grandmother further accented her lovely ensemble.

MAID OF HONOR was Miss Ruth Hollingworth Tuckerman, sister of the bride, who wore pale blue eyelet embroidery over taffeta, with a narrow black velvet belt. Pastel blossoms formed a wreath on her hair, and she carried a bouquet of yellow roses tied with yellow satin.

Two other sisters, Miss Laura Wolcott Tuckerman and Miss Margaret Cary Tuckerman were attendants; also Miss Emily Tuckerman, of New York, a cousin; Miss Helen Macpherson and Miss Joan Ellett, of New York; Miss Helen Cresson, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Thomas E. Adams, the former Caroline Cecil, of Washington.

Their gowns were like that of the maid of honor, but their arm bouquets were of pink roses, tied with pink satin, and their pastel flower coronets were accented with pink blossoms.

Capt. Robert E. Hill, who, like the bridegroom, is an aide to Gen. Thomas Holcomb, Commandant of the Marine Corps, was best man; while ushers included Capt. Samuel B. Griffith, Capt. Jack P. Juhan, Capt. William D. Saunders, Capt. Bankson Holcomb and Lieut. Hugh M. Elwood, all of the Marine Corps; also Lieut. Donald McDonald, U. S. N. and Lieut. James Totten, U. S. A.

THE WEDDING party, moving along the aisle approached the altar, which was lighted with candles and flanked with tall vases of lilies. In record time, the recessional, completed with the "arch of swords" under which the couple walked, was negotiated; and the wedding party and several hundred guests were off to Tuxeden, the Tuckerman home in Bethesda, where the wedding reception took place on the lawn.

Standing with the couple and their attendants to received was the bride's mother, who was gowned in gray chiffon and lace (the frock she wore to the famous British Embassy garden party) and a wide-brimmed purple hat that blended with her orchid corsage.

AMONG THOSE assisting at the reception were Mrs. Benjamin H. Biays, jr., the former Elsie Tuckerman, who was gowned in turquoise chiffon and a picture hat; Miss Clara Louise Tuckerman, cousin of the bride and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wolcott Tuckerman, of Montecito, Calif. Her frock of white chiffon was set off with a pink moire sash and pink felt hat.

Others assisting were Miss Louise Barroll, of Baltimore, and Miss Nancy Brereton, Miss Eleanor Flood, Miss Stellita Stapleton, Miss Yolande de Mauduit and Miss Lizette Riggs, all of Washington. Later, all in the group and their escorts remained with the bridal party for supper on the lawn.

Capt. and Mrs. Williams are now on a Northern motor trip. Traveling, the bride wore a pale blue and white tailored frock with white hat and white accessories. After August 1, she and her husband will be at home in Quantico, Va.

THE BRIDE, who was graduated from National Cathedral School, made her debut in December, 1937, at a reception followed by a dinner dance at Tuxeden. She was also presented at the first Baltimore Cotillion that year. She is a great-great-granddaughter of Oliver Wolcott, signer of the Declaration of Independence, and of Gen. Nathaniel Woodhull of Revolutionary fame. On her father's side she is related to a number of distinguished families, including the Tuckermans and the Carys of Boston. On her mother's side she is descended from the Abercrombies, Stuarts and de Bethunes of Scotland, also the Balfours and the Hollingsworth.

Guests who came from out of town especially for yesterday's ceremony included Mr. and Mrs. Bayard Tuckerman, of Boston; Mrs. Eliot Tuckerman, of New York; Frederick de Peyster, nephew of Mrs. Tuckerman, of New York; Mrs. Caleb Cresson, Miss Emily Vaux Cresson and Biddle Page, of Philadelphia; Mrs. Wayne Macpherson, of New York; Mrs. J. Tunstall Smith, Alfred Jenkins Shriver, Mr. and Mrs. Julian Stuart Jones, all of Baltimore; Mr. and Mrs. Copley Amory, of Milton, Mass.; Mrs. Karl Boy-Ed and Miss Vaida Boy-Ed, of Berryville, Va., and Mr. and Mrs. Lee Barroll, of Ardmore, Pa.

GEN. AND MRS. Thomas Holcomb were centers of interest among the local guests; as was Mrs. George Barnett, widow of the former Commandant of the Marine Corps, whose floor-length flowered chiffon dress was worn with a violet straw hat. Mrs. Charles L. McNary, in a black and white ensemble, was there; also Mrs. William E. Borah, who arrived with Mrs. Emerson Howe. Mrs. Edward Everett Gann, in her British garden party ensemble, blue lace with a matching hat, was in the company; as were the Japanese Ambassador and Mme. Horonouchi, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Grant Meem, and Miss Eleanor Meem; the Commercial Counselor of the Canadian Legation, Merchant Mahoney and his daughter, Miss Ann Mahoney; Gen. and Mrs. Amos Fries, Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor who was accompanied by Mrs. Merle Thorpe,

Camp Flather to Open July 3 for Girl Scouts

Miss Jennings and Miss Getz Preparing for 100 or More Occupants For First Two Weeks of Activities

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Camp May Flather, of the Girl Scouts, now occupied by the 4-H Club, of Monterey, Va., will open July 3 for the regular Girl Scout campers, Mrs. Joel F. Watson, chairman of the Camp May Flather committee, has announced. Miss Florence Jennings, the director, and Miss Jane Getz, business manager, are already there completing preparations for the first group of 100 or more girls going for the opening two weeks.

The camp is at Mount Solon, Va., 20 miles southwest of Harrisonburg, in George Washington National Park. Swimming and other water sports, camp cooking, hiking, nature study and handicrafts are offered in the summer program. Last year the older girls carried on a systematic tour of the area under the supervision of George Cramer, in charge of blister rust control for white pines, and helped destroy the plants that cause the rust. Thus they were able to contribute something to the preservation of the forest they were enjoying, fulfilling the Girl Scout precept of returning compensation for benefits received.

This season there is a new well at camp, 190 feet deep. Health and safety are stressed in all departments of camp activity, Mrs. Watson says.

The campers will be divided into smaller units this season and, with a staff of from 30 to 35 members. There will be a leader for every three or four girls.

In order to eliminate artificial barriers between the young campers and their leaders, the formality of "Miss" and "Mrs." is dispensed with and camp names are used for all of the adults.

Among those returning this year, in addition to Miss Jennings, whose name is "Heron," there are: Miss Getz, who is called "Corona;" Mrs. Gail Wilbur, the dietitian, "Swallow;" Miss Frances Dugan, the trained nurse, known as "Nurse Jane;" Miss Elsie Thomas, program director, "Thrush;" Miss Paula Daller, in charge of trips and hikes, "Owl," Miss Frances Wright, waterfront director, "Sandpiper;" Miss Rosemary Hazard, sports director, "Hap;" Miss Roberta Summers, unit leader, known by an Indian name "Tahowki;" Miss Betty Hicks, unit leader, "Beaver," and Miss Bradley Slayton, assistant unit leader, "Cherry."

The camp will be open this year to girls who do not belong to the Girl Scouts as well as to those who do. Miss Dorothy Davidson at local headquarters, 1825 M street, is receiving applications. Physical examinations are required a week before camp opens.

Voteless Women Voters to Hold Picnics And Informal Discussions Fortnightly

PICNIC LUNCHES and informal discussion of international relations will be a part of fortnightly meetings of a group of members of the District of Columbia Voteless League of Women Voters this summer. The first session was held yesterday at the home of Mrs. Lowell Leake, in Chevy Chase, with Mrs. Max O. Lorenz, newly-elected league president, presiding. Mrs. Lorenz, who is retiring chairman of the department of government and foreign policy, is continuing as leader of the group until fall, when the new chairman, Mrs. G. F. Duncan, will assume her duties. The program included a review of the history of China by Mrs. Henry Moore and a group of old Chinese songs sung by Mrs. Walter Couper.

Among those who attended were Mrs. Earl Smith, Mrs. V. M. Stankoff, Mrs. H E. Becknell, Mrs. Edith M. Easterling, Mrs. Ernst Faesch, Mrs. George Maxwell, Mrs. Maurice Parmelee, Mrs. E. O. Strong, Mrs. Max Weisman, Mrs. J. H. Weiss.

UNUSUAL DOLLS which are a part of the permanent collection of the Goodwill Industries are on display in the Eastern Star garden party being held at Sixteenth and Euclid streets for three more nights.

Among those to be shown are two Victorian wax dolls, in their original dresses, and a small doll in Bulgarian peasant costume which was presented by the Washington Committee for Near East Refugee Handicraft. This doll was made by refugees in Sofia, Bulgaria, in a workshop which corresponds to the Goodwill Industries in that material is collected from the homes and the refugees are paid to renovate it.

Another interesting doll is typical of those sold in the Goodwill Industries stores. The legs, body, arms, and head are from different dolls whose other parts were too far gone to use and were put together by Elizabeth, a victim of infantile paralysis who runs the doll hospital. She also made the wig and dressed the doll.

THE FORT McHENRY CHAPTER of the D. A. R. recently placed markers on the graves of two of its charter members, Mrs. Nancie Nicholls McDowell, in Rock Creek Cemetery, and Mrs. Annie Colvin Nelson, in Cedar Hill Cemetery. Mrs. McDowell's daughter, Mrs. Earle J. Slingland, of White Plains, N. Y., made a special trip to Washington to be present.

I KNOW FOUR ROSES IS ALL WHISKEY AT LEAST 4 YEARS OLD—IS THAT WHY YOU SAY IT'S AMERICA'S FINEST WHISKEY?

DO YOU KNOW

1 Aging improves a good whiskey, but it can't make a poor whiskey good. So all the whiskies that go into Four Roses are outstandingly good to start with.

2 All of them are at least 4 years old—old enough to be bottled in bond. And they would be bottled in bond, if we thought they would be as good, sold separately that way.

3 But our 74 years' experience has taught us that the finest whiskey is made by combining several of our whiskies into one whiskey that's finer still.

4 Then we purposely make Four Roses lighter and milder, by reducing it to 90 proof (instead of the stronger 100 proof which bottled-in-bond whiskies must be).

5 Four Roses is ALL whiskey—with the mellowness of age, and the greatness that only generations of distilling skill can give. Compare it with any other whiskey made.

$1.54 FULL PINT | $2.99 FULL QUART

A blend of straight whiskies—90 proof. The straight whiskies in Four Roses are 4 years or more old. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., Louisville and Baltimore.

A TRULY GREAT WHISKEY—FOUR ROSES

IT'S ALL WHISKEY 4 YEARS OR MORE OLD

25 Speak On Suffrage For District

'We Want to Be Americans' Keynote In Mass Meeting Of 400 Citizens

Twenty-five reasons why Washington residents should be granted suffrage were explained by as many speakers last night in a two-hour open meeting in the Chamber of Commerce Building, and summed up by one of the last speakers in one sentence, "We want to be Americans!"

"I came to this country as a youngster of 21 because I wanted to leave oppression for a free country," said M. Bord. "I became a naturalized American and I am proud of it. But here in Washington we are not Americans."

More than 400 persons heard some part of the "speak your mind on the District government meeting" called by the Citizen's Conference on District Suffrage, at which speakers blamed everything from crowded street cars to political corruption on the lack of suffrage. Some spoke as representatives of civic or labor groups, others as private citizens.

Randolph Cheered

Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee, the object of praise by many speakers and implied censure by others, drew cheers at the end of the broadcast first hour of the meeting by calling on them to "march forward in a solid phalanx in behalf of a cause that is right and just and which will triumph."

Held to four minutes each by the gavel of Chairman Wilbur S. Finch, speakers advanced such bases as these for the suffrage demand:

District labor laws are inadequate; the District government is a "mockery of Americanism . . . it exalts fascism and discredits democracy;" Congressional committees give District residents inadequate hearings on bills affecting them; "the refugees from a Soviet chain gang who are running our Government;" high death rate from tuberculosis in Washington; bad housing; inadequate recreation space; difficulty of getting jobs; high price of milk; government by men "responsible to business interests in other States," and many others.

Dr. Smith Speaks

Speakers pointed out that District residents are "neither insane nor aliens," and had sent as many men to the war as States of equal population. Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith attacked the Public Welfare Board, and Sparrel A. Wood made a moving appeal for more enthusiastic support for the movement.

"Our job is hard, but it is not like the job our great grandparents had to do," he said.

The meeting adopted a resolution indorsing all bills before Congress to give the District suffrage, and adjourned after 2 hours and 15 minutes, to meet again at 9:30 a. m. today in the Capitol rotunda to lobby Congressional committees.

Other Speakers

Other speakers were Sidney R. Katz, of the Washington Industrial Council of the C. I. O.; George A. Warren, of the Mid-City Citizens Association; A. B. Fletcher, Rama Gibson, Voters' League of the District of Columbia; Dr. F. Thomas Evans, former president of the National Democratic League; Arthur Bernstein, Citizens' Committee for Fair Taxation; George Marshall, Ray Everett, District of Columbia Health Forum; P. A. Sughrue, American Legion; Clara Goldberg, Women's Trade Union League; David Scull, Washington Youth Council; M. Chancey, District of Columbia Communist Party; Benjamin C. Marsh, Callis Redd, Constitutional Crusaders of America; Milton Fisher, Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians (C. I. O.); Mrs. A. B. Woodson, George H. Brown, Columbia Heights Citizen's Association; Harold Vatter, American League for Peace and Democracy; Joseph Josselson, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, and others from the floor.

We Do Get Around

Americans traveled a total of 250,000,000,000 miles in 1936, the Bureau of Public Roads reported yesterday. The average automobile traveled 8,870 miles, or more than three times across the country.

Fla. Aircade Halts Here on Way to Fair

Forty-five planes of Florida's "aircade" to the New York World's Fair skimmed into Hybla Valley Airport yesterday after 900-mile flights from West Palm Beach and their pilots flew over the route again—conventionally—at Wardman Park Hotel last night.

Eighty-two ships, with 225 pilots and passengers representing each of Florida's 67 counties, started out from West Palm Beach. The remainder, except for one which developed engine trouble and dropped out at Orangeburg, Va., paused at Richmond overnight to refuel, but there were ample recruits for a "rehash" here last night.

Conversation revolved around relative merits of big and little ships with pilots of planes ranging from Aroncas to Sikorsky amphibians participating.

One airman (the owner of a light plane) pointed out for the benefit of The Post and the pilot of a larger ship that a 65-horse-power Aronca had shown its tail surfaces to a 215-horse-power Stinson. He was reminded, somewhat emphatically, that the Stinson was 3 years old.

The aerial expedition is not without feminine allure. Two of the pilots are women and two of the passengers on the flight are Miss Ruth Shelley and Miss Dede Hale, respectively "Miss Miami" and "Miss Florida" after winning recent beauty contests.

First to land here on the second lap of the flight, which was broken Tuesday night at Savannah, Ga., was H. C. Whitney, Florida aeronautics director, who scorched over the course in a little better than six hours.

Accompanied by their colleagues now in Richmond, the pilots will take off for New York this morning to fly into Roosevelt Field in mass formation. Four days of flying around the metropolis will be climaxed Sunday at "Florida Aviation Day" at the World of Tomorrow.

Park Commission Will Receive Data On Traffic, Slums

Preliminary findings in a survey on land values, slum dwellings and traffic accidents in the downtown area, as they relate to the need for a midcity playground, will be presented to the National Capital Park and Planning Commission today.

If the need is justified, the commission is expected to take steps toward the acquisition of a site for such a playground immediately. The report will be read by Charles Herrick, city planner.

Among other items on the agenda of the monthly meeting today and tomorrow are consideration of a new road plan for Anacostia Park, applications for zoning changes affecting the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway, and thte 1941 land purchasing program

Lawyers See Vreeland on Lunacy Bill

Legislator Reports Progress and Says Bar Group Will Meet Him Again by Monday

Encouraging progress toward improvement of the District's lunacy commitment law was reported yesterday after a conference between Representative Vreeland (Republican), of New Jersey, and a delegation from the District Bar Association.

"The lawyers were very co-operative," said Vreeland, a former judge. "They analyzed what they said were the weak points and the strong points of my bill. We'll get together on this problem, never fear."

Vreeland's bill would abolish the commission on mental health and deliver its duties to the health officer. He said the lawyers' group would confer with him again on or before next Monday, when the measure is scheduled to be called up on the House calendar.

"The only thing I insist upon," said Vreeland, "is that present conditions in the psychopathic ward at Gallinger Hospital must be remedied. The overcrowding and intermingling of violent and sane patients must stop. Whether the commission on mental health is to be continued or not is secondary."

H. Mason Welch, chairman of a special bar committee on the lunacy law and head of the delegation to Vreeland's office yesterday, expressed his satisfaction with the conference and praised the Representative's efforts to correct the Gallinger situation. He said his committee would meet tonight to tackle all aspects of the problem.

Give Christian Faith a Chance, Lutherans Told

Modern church youth is being challenged to give Christian faith an opportunity to prove its strength, the Rev. William Sodt, of Columbus, Ohio, declared yesterday at the fifth international convention of the Luther League of the American Lutheran Church.

Stewardship secretary of the American Lutheran Church, he told 1,000 delegates from all parts of United States and Canada that "Christ and His interests must be paramount in the life of today's youth, for it is only through Him that a faith can be developed as is needed in the maze of disturbing influences which surround us today."

Earlier in the day, inspiring rites of Holy Communion were held, with the Rev. Henry E. Koch, of Columbus, executive secretary of the organization, making the address

Capital News In Brief

Science Baits Shad

A Susquehanna River shad recently broke all the rules and got caught on a hook and line instead of rising for a fly, the Commerce Department revealed yesterday, and thereby added to the scientific data of the United States Bureau of Fisheries conservation experts.

It was not the shad's unusual taste, for bait that impressed the scientists, however, but the fact that it bore a metal tag, affixed the previous year, when the fish was netted in nearly the same spot as Dr. L. W. Fetter hooked it. By means of these tags the Bureau studies the migratory habits of the fish, as an aid to solving conservation problems.

Six Boys Missing

School ended yesterday and vacation began, with startling effect on a half-dozen District boys. Parents reported to police these were missing from home:

Train Youth, Cut Crime Says Curran

Police Court Judge Praises Welfare Work of Business Clubs at Banquet

Crime cannot be halted "merely by trying to wipe out criminals," Police Court Judge Edward M. Curran declared last night at a banquet closing the national convention of American Business Clubs at the Mayflower Hotel.

"Crime must be stopped at its source," Judge Curran asserted, adding, "The time to strike is when the youth is ready to be molded into an adult who will either follow the tangled path of crime or the wholesome one of honesty.

Declaring that "no single crime problem is as menacing as that of juvenile delinquency," Curran said the best means to prevent youthful offenders from becoming hardened criminals was through youth organizations that "afford proper outlets and supervision for boys' groups," in recreation and vocational training.

Curran praised the welfare work being done by the business clubs among potential juvenile criminals which he described a "service to the Nation" in the solution of a "complex" problem that needs the assistance of all of us.

Clerk Says Surgeons Left Tubing in Her

Blanche McCord, Census Bureau clerk, of 1200 Sixteenth street northwest, yesterday asked District court for $100,000 damages in a complaint in which she blamed Emergency Hospital and two physicians for leaving a tube, known as a "whistle," in her when she had an operation three years ago.

The "whistle" caused her pain and permanent injury, the complaint charged, and so did another operation which was necessary to remove it.

New U. S. Rules For Promotion In Effect July 1

Booked as the first major accomplishment of the Council on Personnel Administration, revised promotion regulations for Government employes will go into effect July 1. It gives various departments and agencies the right to hold examinations for specialized job step-ups.

The Civil Service Commission will remain in charge of all promotion examinations for jobs general to two or more agencies and will retain supervisory control of the others. It is preparing a pamphlet to explain the rules.

All typing and secretarial promotions, for instance, will continue to be controlled by the commission. For career jobs in such agencies as the Bureau of Home Economics, on the other hand, administrative and personnel officials will be permitted to prepare their own promotion examinations.

This, according to the personnel council, will put promotion on a more personalized basis, free the commission from some of its "omnibus qualities," and insure requirements that fit the particular job.

Employe relations will be discussed by the council this afternoon at its regular Thursday meeting. Here, again, an effort is being made to evolve a plan "whereby things can be worked out at the grass roots, by the people who are directly involved."

Navy Yard to Get Four-Day Holiday

Assistant Secretary of the Navy Edison announced yesterday that all employes of the Naval Field Service, including the Navy Yard here, would have a four-day holiday over July 4.

House Gets D. C. Traffic Control Bill

Five serious injuries were chalked up to District traffic yesterday, while a bill was introduced in the House to place in effect here the Kreml system of traffic control.

Representative Rudolph G. Tenerowicz (Democrat), Michigan, introduced a bill to establish here "a unified system of traffic control and a system of scientific investigation and safety education."

Injured in traffic yesterday were:

William H. Bray, 66, of 1335 D street northeast, struck by a taxicab while crossing F street at Tenth northwest.

Charley Moore, colored, 65, of Greensboro, N. C., who suffered a skull fracture when the truck in which he was riding overturned at Fourth street and New York avenue northeast.

Indians Win Wild Game From Nats

Krakauskas Balks in 9th To Lose, 9-8

Nats Pound Five Hurlers for 17 Hits; Welaj Fails in 9th With Bases Loaded

By Shirley Povich.

Playing sensational baseball—sensational in that they outhit the Cleveland Indians, 17 to 7, and took a 9-8 beating, the Nats continued the evil tenor of their ways yesterday. To clinch their defeat they dug up a rare old sin—a balk in the ninth inning that moved the winning run across the plate.

Joe Krakauskas lost his effectiveness, his equilibrium, his ninth-inning lead and his understanding of the pitching rules in the final inning when the Indians surged from behind to wipe out a 7-16 deficit. The horrible details of that ninth inning follow:

Krakky Too Hasty

Krakauskas, who as a relief pitcher, had struck out three batters in two innings, inspired the Indians to tie the score when he pitched hard-swinging Ken Keltner his second three-bagger of the game, before getting anybody out. In this crisis, Kraky fanned Grimes for his fourth strikeout in two and a third innings and then a brainstorm enveloped him.

Facing Pinch hitter Sammy Hale, Krakky grabbed Hale's bounder back to the box, and on the ill-founded suspicion that Keltner was attempting to score on the play, threw the ball home. He was embarrassed to discover that Keltner had not moved from third base and that Hale was now safe on first.

Krakky slung two strikes past Pinch Hitter Julius Solters and was apparently getting out of the inning nicely when Solters whacked a single to leftfield that scored Keltner with the tying run and moved Hale to second. But Krakauskas wasn't through.

Made Notorious, Anyway

The next thing he did was to start his wind-up with Hemsley at bat and for no reason at all, stopped it before retreating off the rubber. "Balk!" shouted Manager Oscar Vitt, of the Indians, and balk it was, Umpire-in-Chief Quinn waiving Hale home with the run that broke the 7-to-7 tie. Bucky Harris, Krakauskas and other Nats protested, but it remained a balk.

Well, before it was over, Bruce Campbell doubled to center and the Indians had their third run of the inning and a 9-to-7 lead.

Carl Hubbell Helps Giants Beat Pirates

Cliff Melton, However, Gets Credit for 6-4 Victory Over Bucs

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, June 21.—The Old Master, Carl Hubbell, suppressed the Pirates again today—but it was in a relief appearance and another man got credit for the New York Giants' 6-to-4 victory.

Cliff Melton, benefiting by the four runs the Giants amassed in the first two innings, earned his fourth victory. He himself singled two runs home in the second inning to drive Jim Tobin from the mound to his seventh defeat.

The Pirates, presenting a revamped line-up with Elbie Fletcher on first, Ray Mueller catching, and Pep Young making his first appearance at second since twisting his knee in early April, tried vainly to catch up. They forced Melton out in the eighth and scored two runs off Walter Brown before Hubbell took over and retired the side with the bases loaded.

Yanks Beat Chisox On Dickey's Homer

Champs Solve Thornton Lee's Hurling And Bunch Hits to Win, 9-8; Lefty Gomez Pounded by Rivals

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 21.—Solving Southpaw Thornton Lee's slants for five runs in the fifth, the New York Yankees bunched all their runs into three consecutive innings today to come from behind and nose out the Chicago White Sox, 9 to 8.

The clincher was Bill Dickey's seventh homer of the season with Joe DiMaggio on base in the seventh. DiMag had singled to score Tom Henrich, who had doubled.

Pounding Lefty Gomez hard, the Sox plodded to a six-run lead in the early innings and even after the Yankees tied the score in the sixth, managed to regain the lead with two more runs in the seventh off Steve Sundra. Again in the ninth they loaded the bases with one out, but Eric McNair hit into a double play.

The Yankees' big inning started with a pair of walks and Jake Powell, pinchhitting for Gomez, beating out a bounder to fill the bags. But Frank Crosetti hit into a double play and the threat of a storm seemed over. However, four singles and a wild throw followed before Clint Brown took over.

Brown gave up the other Yankee

Texas Netman Wins In Canadian Tourney

Windsor, Ontario, June 21 (AP).—Morey Lewis, Kenyon College star whose home is in Texarkana, Tex., eliminated the top-seeded Canadian, Don McDiarmid, of Ottawa, in the fourth round of the Canadian tennis championships today, 6—2, 6—4. Lewis, who arrived here only yesterday, is expected to meet Martin Buxby, of Miami, Fla., No. 1 U. S. entry, in the finale.

Four Americans Go Up in London Grass Courts Play

London, June 21 (U.P.).—Playing in the face of a stiff wind which followed heavy morning rains, four Americans marched closer to singles titles in the Queens Club grass courts tennis tournament here today.

Bobby Riggs, of Chicago, and Elwood Cooke, of Portland, Oreg., were the advancing male stars while Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, of Boston, and Miss Gracyn Wheeler, of Santa Monica, Calif., led the women.

Riggs showed little skill in disposing of Neil Edwards, champion of New Zealand, and Alejo Russell, of Argentina, in second and third round victories, which won him a place in the semifinals.

Cowboy Scott Bout Postponed Again

Louisville, Ky., June 21 (AP).—The scheduled ten-round boxing bout between Sammy Angott, of Louisville, and Cowboy Howard Scott, of Washington, D. C., two of the Nation's outstanding lightweights, was postponed tonight for the second time. It will be held Monday.

Riggs Seeded 2d to Austin At Wimbledon

Defeat by McNeill Displaces U. S. Star; Alice Marble Is First

By the Associated Press.

Wimbledon, Eng., June 21.—Because he was beaten by Don McNeill in the French hard courts championship final, Bobby Riggs, of Chicago, today had to take a back seat to England's Henry Wilfred (Bunny) Austin in the seedings for the All-England Tennis Championships which start Monday.

Riggs, top-ranking United States amateur, was placed at No. 2 with Austin, runner-up last year to Don Budge, No. 1. McNeill, the Oklahoma City youngster, who has been on a world tour, drew third place, followed by Ferenc Puncec, Yugoslavia; Henner Henkel, Germany; Elwood Cooke, of Portland, Oreg.; Roderick Henzel, Germany, and Ignacy Tloczynski, Poland.

Marble Jacobs On Top

The United States drew the top two positions in women's singles. Alice Marble, of San Francisco, the United States titleholder, was seeded No. 1, and Helen Jacobs, beaten by Helen Wills Moody in the 1938 final, No. 2. Between them and Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, of Cambridge, Mass., ranked eighth, came Mrs. Hilda Sperling, Denmark; Mme. Rene Mathieu, France; Jadwiga Jedrzejowska, Poland, and Kay Stammers and Ruth Mary Hardwick, Great Britain.

The draw which followed the seeding obviously was planned for an Austin-Riggs final. To reach it, the English veteran will have to get through a top half that includes Owen Anderson, of Los Angeles, whom he probably will meet in the second round; McNeill, Cooke, Framjo Kukuljevic, of Yugoslavia; W. C. Choy, of China; Henkel and Demeter Mitic, Yugoslavia.

Gehrig Receives News Like 'Iron Man'

By the Associated Press.

Rochester, Minn., June 21.—Lou Gehrig, baseball's "iron man," showed he had iron in his makeup when Mayo clinic physicians told him he had chronic poliomyelitis and could never again play baseball, it was disclosed today.

Discovery that he could not return to the Yankee line-up was made several days ago. Neither physicians nor Gehrig would announce the findings here, the Yankee slugger preferring to tell club officials first.

During a series of tests and examinations physicians ascertained more and more of Gehrig's condition.

Announcement of the findings were not made to Gehrig abruptly. His knowledge of his complaint came about gradually.

Gehrig bravely received the news, merely saying:

"I suspected something was wrong." He realized, he said, that he was slowing up and seemed not greatly shocked.

The former Yankee slugger was cheerful throughout further examinations.

On Tuesday he was a guest at an informal birthday party and at no time did he show any evidence that he had heard the verdict that probably would permanently retire him from active baseball.

One of his last acts at the airport yesterday before leaving was to autograph a 10-cent baseball for a small boy.

Ruth. "Imagine what kind of a constitution he has, to have played all last year. It must have started a couple of years ago. It hits me hard. Lou is one of my favorites——," he shook his head sadly.

Gehrig emerged from the private office, went to his locker and started to change into his uniform. For a while others were hesitant about approaching him, but his cheerful grin and bubbling good nature soon dropped the barrier.

He Can Take It

"I have to accept the bitter with the sweet," he said philosophically. "If this is my finish I'll take it."

He said he never dreamed what his trouble was, other than that "something was wrong."

"Had I known I'd have quit long ago," he said. Asked if he would take a long rest, he replied:

"What better rest could I have than just being with the boys every day. I tell you, I never got such a kick in my life as when I received a birthday wire from them. My eyes really filled up."

Remains on Pay Roll

Barrow said Gehrig would remain on the pay roll under his present contract for the balance of the season at least. The doctor's statement said that Lou could continue in the game "in some executive capacity."

At Rochester it was disclosed that Gehrig knew several days ago he could not return to the Yankee line-up, but with characteristic fortitude and ever-present good humor he kept the secret hidden.

In the dugout before today's game he was the center of lively conversation, buoying up the scuttled spirits of his teammates with tales of Mayo miracles. When his head popped above the dugout he immediately became the aim of autograph hunters, who didn't as yet know the big frame with the No. 4 on the back had knocked his last home run for them.

Vanishing Era

The end of Gehrig's playing days marks one more milestone in the vanishing era of the Yankees' "murderers' row," when Ruth and Gehrig were death to opposing pitchers. Ruth retired some time ago.

Gehrig started his consecutive game streak in 1925. This spring his inability to get in condition caused wide comment, although often excused with the remark that "Lou always looks bad in the spring." He failed to improve, removed himself from the line-up May 2 and today was removed permanently on doctor's orders.

Gehrig compiled an amazing record in his 16 full years in the majors. He led the American League batsmen in 1934 with an average of .363, he scored 100 runs or more for 13 years, and shares with Babe Ruth the record for driving in more than 100 runs a year for a 13-year span, leading the American League in that department five times.

Second to Ruth

At the end of the 1938 season Gehrig was second to Ruth in the greatest number of long hits—with 1,190. He hammered out 535 two-base hits, 161 three-basers and 494 home runs over the 16-year span.

In 1922 he homered in six consecutive games, twice with the bases full. He was second only to Ruth in the most bases on balls in his lifetime, getting 1,506 passes to Ruth's 2,056.

The records credit Gehrig with a lifetime batting average of .341 for 2,717 hits in 7,973 times at bat. He drove in a total of 1,990 runs and struck out 787 times.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The suspicion is that the Nats can spot the Brooklyn Dodgers four brain-concussions, a strong streak of inherent lunacy and a complete misunderstanding of right and wrong and out-daffy 'em. Brooklyn baseball is safe, sane and rank reactionary compared to the 1939 performances of the never-a-dull-moment Nats

POVICH

They have been losing ball games this season in a manner that is probably making the late Gen. Doubleday revolve in his mausoleum at Arlington. Yesterday's exhibition, when they outhit the Indians 17 to 7 and were licked, 9 to 8, wasn't a rare afternoon with the Nats. It was pretty typical of 'em. Mr. Clark Griffith, sitting in his little stucco office when his club is on the road, has been spared half of the horrible happenings, but we haven't.

Yesterday's performance is worthy of review, however. All that the Nats did was to knock Mel Harder, Johnny Broaca, Bob Feller (yeah, Feller) and Bill Zuber from the box. That ought to add up to a victory by a pretty sizable score, but it didn't. What it added up to was a ninth-inning beating. The Dodgers in their zaniest days never knocked the likes of those pitchers out of the box and failed to win.

You Don't Know Those Nats

The natural suspicion was that with Joe Krakauskas striking out the Indians at the rate of two per inning, Washington's one-run lead was safe going into the ninth. But you don't know the Nats of 1939. The upshot was that Krakky balked the winning run across the plate.

And when Bucky Harris scanned the Washington bench in the ninth inning for a pinch hitter to replace Rick Ferrell, he discovered that the only players at his command were a batch of slew-footed pitchers and another catcher who was only even money to beat Ferrell in a fair race. The Nats couldn't even dig up a pinch-runner in that ninth.

Three times in their last four battles with the Nats the Indians have beaten the Washington club in the last inning. The day before yesterday's debacle, the same player lost the game for the Nats on three different occasions before he lost it finally. He couldn't lay down a safe bunt, he couldn't catch an ordinary fly to right field and he was apparently looking for four-leaf clovers at a time when he should have been scoring the tying run.

Poor Ken Chase has turned in three superb pitching jobs for the Nats in his last three starts and what has happened? He lost all of 'em. He pitched one-hit ball against the Indians for eight innings at Cleveland and the upshot was a 2-1 defeat. A short fly hit the fence for the winning run. He held Chicago to eight hits the other day and saw the winning runs score on a pair of errors by Buddy Lewis.

Influence Spreading to Front Office

And how about the day last week when Dutch Leonard pitched shutout ball for nine innings and didn't even get a tie, because the Nats couldn't stir up a run for him and eventually lost the game in the fourteenth inning?

There was that day, too, in Detroit when the Nats had Buck Newsom on the ropes and apparently were going to win a ball game. That was the day when Taft Wright, waiting for a fly ball to descend, fell down for no reason at all and let an important run score.

The influence apparently is spreading to the Nats' front office, too. A few hours after Clark Griffith described young Bob Prichard as a finished first baseman, the rookie went out on the field and committed two miserable muffs that lost the Nats a ball game. Reversing his opinion, Griffith that evening declared he was sending Prichard to the minors because he wasn't hitting. Prichard's answer to that was two Singles and a double the next day.

The Nats could stand reinforcements, but the one fellow they need above all others if they are to challenge the Dodgers for complete supremacy in the Daffiness League is Rollie Hemsley. The play-boy catcher of the Indians, who awhile ago was an even money bet to fail to show up at the park, was listening yesterday to newsboys shouting the headlines concerning Lou Gehrig.

"Gehrig paralyzed!" They were yelling as Hemsley entered the park.

"Whaddayknow about that," said Rollicking Rollie. "I never knew that guy ever to take a drink."

Bob Feller Goes To Capitol to See Federal Probers

By the Associated Press.

Bob Feller, Cleveland's fireball pitcher, was assured by a member yesterday that the Federal Monopoly Committee does not intend to investigate baseball.

Feller dropped in on the committee's investigation of life insurance practices and was quickly spied in the audience by Acting Chairman Reece (Republican), Tennessee.

"We have Bob Feller with us," Reece interrupted the hearing to announce, "and I will say for him that we have no intention of investigating baseball."

Mrs. Walper Beats Mrs. Simons on 20th in Women's Feature

Mrs. Meckley Loses, 5 & 4, To Mrs. Davy

Marion Brown Wins Over Mrs. Pray; Mrs. Peabody Routs Mrs. Emge by 7-6

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Mrs. H. J. Simons, one of Manor's vastly improved golfers, made her biggest bid in local tournament play in the District Women's Championship yesterday at Columbia, taking Mrs. Leo Walper to the 20th hole before losing in the outstanding quarter-final attraction.

Mrs. Myron Davy, a featured performer in the first round for her 21-hole triumph over Mrs. Walter Stokes, had a little tougher assignment yesterday in former champion Mrs. Betty Meckley, but simply brought out her best game and won going away, 5 and 4.

Marion Brown advanced the hard way, winning 2 and 1 over a Manor clubmate, Mrs. L. G. Pray, while the fourth semi-finalist was a "dark-horse" entry, Mrs. Hume Peabody, of Army and Navy, who made the galleries sit up and take notice with a 7 and 6 rout of Mrs. Ora Emge, Indian Spring.

Rocky Road Ahead

Mrs. Davy, who had had a rocky path thus far, is in for no letdown today when she meets the defending champion and favorite, Miss Brown, at 9:15 while in the lower bracket Mrs. Peabody's unexpected rise will be threatened by Mrs. Walper.

After Mrs. Simons figured in the major upset of the first round in defeating Mrs. Bishop Hill, of Chevy Chase, they still gave her little chance against the steady stroking of Mrs. Walper, but as late as the thirteenth hole she was possessing a one-hole lead. Mrs. Walper squared it at the short fourteenth and went 1 up on 16 with a par 3, but Mrs. Simons won the next with a par as the wife of the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. champion was short in two and took five.

They both played the eighteenth well, and Mrs. Walper was apparently home on the nineteenth when Mrs. Simons was trapped in three, but the former 3-putted and they halved in six. A well-played par on the twentieth gave Mrs. Walper the match, as Mrs. Simons elected to play safe in two and her chip and putt for the par failed.

Best Golf of Day

The best golf of the day was played by Mrs. Davy. The Congressional entrant, on the scene well before her starting time for some early morning practice, was out in 40 with a 7. Leading 4 up and 5 to play, she exploded beautifully from a trap on the fourteenth for a par and the victory over Mrs. Meckley. Mrs. Davy needed par for a 77 as the match ended.

Mrs. Peabody who played in the tournaments here in 1934-35 but has been out of town since that time, has lowered her handicap and improved her game. She won the Nailiaea Club Championship in Honolulu, and last year won the Beauvor Invitation in Montgomery, Ala. Mrs. Peabody was out in 43 and 4 up, and won three holes in a row for the 7 and 6 triumph. She played the back nine out and had 40, and 83.

Mid-Atlantic P. G. A. Qualifying On Today

Approximately 30 Players Will Compete For Three Berths in National Tourney To Be Held in New York, July 9-15

With a definite field of 22, and at least 8 post entries expected, some 30 members of the Middle-Atlantic P. G. A. will battle for three berths to the National tournament, July 9 to 15, in New York, in the 36-hole sectional qualifying rounds today at Indian Spring.

A majority of the field of District, Maryland and Virginia pros played practice rounds over the course yesterday and Jack Isaacs, of the Old Dominion delegation, was by far the hottest of the lot, dropping seven birdies, an eagle and going over par on three holes for a 66.

This section was awarded four places last year but several of the members neglected to pay their dues and thus the places were cut down to three. The berths are awarded on a ratio of approximately one to every ten paid up members of the Association, at the time of the trials.

With the tournament in New York, and only a few blocks from the World's Fair, the fight for the places will be in earnest today, as all of the entries really want to play in the event, and are not trying for sentimental reasons. The low three today will play in New York, and a qualifying berth there is worth $100 and more for every match won.

Host Professional Al Jamison, with a trio of 71's and a 70 in his last four efforts over his home course, is the logical choice of the local contingent, while Leo Walper, playing very well, and Cliff Spencer, with a sub-par spurt here and there, are other possibilities.

Isaac's 66 makes him the most feared member of the Virginia delegation, while Errie Ball, the straight hitter from Charlottesville, and Rut Coffey, Winchester, are other marked men from the Old Dominion. Baltimore's best, including Ralph Beach, Johnny Bass and Andy Gibson, practiced yesterday and reported favorable scores.

The P. G. A. ruling of all balls nearest the cup on the green, and in the way of another ball, must be putted will be enforced, with the penalty disqualification. Pairings:

9:30-1:00—Allen J. Burton (Army-Navy G. C.), Cliff Spencer (Beaver Dam G. C.); 9:35-1:05—John Bass (Clifton Park G. C.), Leo Walper (Bethesda, Md.); 9:40-1:10—Irving Schloss (Hillendale G. C.), John Flattery (Rodgers Forge G. C.); 9:45-1:15—George Diffenbaugh (Kenwood G. C.), Charles Betschler (Hillendale G. C.); 9:50-1:20—Andy Gibson (Bonnie View G. C.), Robert Barnett (Chevy Chase G. C.); 9:55-1:25—James Flattery (Baltimore C. C.), Al Jamison (Indian Springs G. C.); 10:00-1:30—Errie Ball (Farmington C. C.), Ralph Beach (Suburban G. C.); 10:05-1:35—Bill Schreiber (Mount Pleasant G. C.), Rut Coffey (Winchester G. C.); 10:10-1:40—Eddie Koehler (Officers Gold Club), Joseph Miller (Women's National G. C.); 10:15-1:45—Alec C. Taylor (Rolling Road G. C.), Frank Invernizzi (Hillsdale G. C.).

Stevens, Worsham Leave For Scranton Open

Eddie Stevens, assistant professional at Manor, and Lewis Worsham, assistant to Bob Barnett at Chevy Chase, left last night for Scranton, Pa., where they will play in the $5,000 Scranton Open, Friday through Sunday. The tourney is 72 holes.

The event is a new one to the National P. G. A. card, but will draw a majority of the leading pros. Stevens and Worsham will play a practice round today over the Scranton course, neither having seen the layout before.

Dave Johnsen, D. C. Player, Loses at Navy

Special Dispatch to The Post

Annapolis, Md., June 21.—Top-Seeded Russell Bobbitt, of Georgia Tech, Southeastern Conference champion, and Fourth-Seeded Dave Johnsen, of George Washington University, were defeated here today by Bill Hardie and George Poro, of Miami University, in the singles semifinals of the qualifying play for the National Collegiate Tennis Championships, to be held next week in Philadelphia.

Hardie's victory over Bobbitt was the biggest upset of the match. Pore, seeded No. 2, was given a good fight by the Washington boy, who lost the first set, but forced playing to 8 to 6 games in the second and third sets.

Pore and Hardie qualified for the collegiate championships by their victories and also earned the right to enter the finals qualifying play tomorrow, when Bobbitt and Johnsen will have their last chance.

Silva Defeats Lancaster in 8

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., June 21.—Mexican Joe Silva, of Washington, D. C., pummeled his way to an 8-round decision over Jimmy Lancaster, of Wilmington, Del., here tonight in the feature bout of the first professional boxing show held in Municipal Stadium in several years. About 3,000 fans were on hand to see the fighters battle on even terms for five innings. In the sixth, Silva had his opponent in trouble and it was his fight from there in.

Mickey Walker, undefeated former world's middleweight champion, opened his series of exhibition bouts in search of a "white hope" by knocking out Red Bush, of Cumberland, in the second round of their 4-round bout. Whitey Starliber scored a heavyweight knockout over Red Miller in the first minute of the first round. Irish Jackie Carter decisioned Ernie Kahler, and Pete Carinzi took the nod from Earl Fredericks.

Hader to Act Like Gentleman On Mat Card Tonight—Maybe

Jack Hader, the reformed Kansas "Hate Man," will meet Laverne Baxter, who is allergic to referees, tonight in the wrestling ring at Griffith Stadium as the main attraction on a card which promises to furnish plenty of entertainment for Washington's fun-loving fans.

Hader, who once claimed to be the No. 1 ring villain here, will turn "gentleman" wrestler tonight and fight clean—unless he becomes irked by Baxter's presence in the ring also, he said yesterday. Baxter often spends some of his time in the ring beating up the referee and has started riots which ended with ringside fans pitching in and squads of policemen rushing on the scene.

Two Indian gentlemen, Jules Strongbow and Chief Chewaki, will add luster to the card by meeting in a return fight that actually appears as a real "grudge" bout. The Chief and Jules are comparable to the screen's Laurel and Hardy.

In their match last week, both fell out of the ring and continued their fighting in the ringside, displaying honest-to-goodness anger until the police intervened. In the mix-up Chief Chewaki put several bloody dents in Jules' head with a chair and followed up back in the ring with a woman fan's shoe.

After the match, which was declared a draw, Chewaki uttered numerous unpleasantries about Jules' claims of Indian ancestors, demanded a return match and then walked out of the dressing room to apologize to the lady fan whose shoe he appropriated.

Every match tonight features at least one contender for the coveted local villain title. Villain Nanjo Singh, Hndu "cobra death lock" man, will meet Tiger Joe Marsh. Villain Jim Clmstock will meet Ed White and King Kong Symkowski—villain ipso facto—will meet Pete Managoff in supporting matches. First bout is at 8:30 p. m.

12 District Golfers Enter State Amateur

Delegation Includes Two Former Champs, Burnett and Peacock

Washington's delegation in the 19th annual Maryland State Amateur Championship includes a pair of former champions, Roger Peacock and Volney Burnett, Indian Spring. Only 12 District golfers entered the event starting Friday, at Rolling Road, but as many more post entries are expected.

The local contingent makes up in strength what its lacks in numbers. Aside from the former titleholders, Congressional entered two real threats in Billy Dettweiler and Earl McAleer, while the young aces, Buddy Sharkey and Ralph Bogart, Indian Spring, and Dick Meyer, Manor, are entered as well as Capital's strong duo, Billy Houghton and George Molloy.

A field of 95 turned in entries to Association Secretary Emmet Gary, but post entries, and those in the mail not yet received, should swell the total well over the 100 mark.

Baltimore's stars, minus defending champion Otto Greiner, who passed up the event for the National Intercollegiates, otherwise entered intact, including former champions Spencer Overton, Ernie Caldwell and Cliff Richardson. Overton, playing over his home course, has already been installed as tournament favorite.

The field will play medal rounds on Friday, with match play on Saturday, and the semi-finals and finals on Sunday. Post entries will be accepted today at the association offices, 16 McClellan place, Baltimore.

Washington Pairings
11:06, Volney Burnett (Indian Spring) and Gene Bruhing (Rolling Road); 12:48, George Molloy (Capital) and J. R. Armacost (Mount Pleasant); 12:54, Billy Houghton (Capital) and Ralph Bogart (Indian Spring); 1:18, Gillie Young (Congressional) and Irvin Miller (Mount Pleasant); 1:24, Earl McAleer (Congressional) and Nathan Kaufman, jr. (Suburban); 1:36, Buddy Sharkey (Indian Spring) and Charles Bassler (unattached); 1:48, F. A. Savage (Elk) and Dick Meyer (Manor); 2:06, Billy Dettweiler (Congressional) and Roger Peacock (Indian Spring); 3:36, Merrell Whittlesey (Manor) and Maury Fitzgerald (Kenwood).

Amateur Fights Slated for Tonight

The Columbia Post, No. 40, American Legion, will stage a boxing show tonight at 8 o'clock at Post No. 4 hall, 414 Ninth street northwest, for the benefit of its baseball team.

Bill (Reds) Gautier, Golden Gloves finalist, will fight Eddie Royston, also a Gloves boxer, in a 105-pound class match. Other bouts will bring together Jimmie Hagan and George Garbo, in the 95-pound class; Pat Cannon and Harry Clatterbuck, 85-pound class, and Jerry Townsend and Jimmy Garbo, 75-pounders. Carl Fontanini, director of the Brookland Boys' Club, will referee.

Favorites Fall In Junior Cup Quarter-Finals

Brinkerhoff, Wickham Upset in Straight Sets By Unseeded Players

Harry Brinkerhoff, District junior champion, who was given the top seeding in the absence of Allie Ritzenberg, defending champion, and fourth-seeded Bill Wickham were eliminated from the Junior Davis Cup tennis tournament yesterday in quarter-final round upsets at the Army and Navy Country Club.

Brinkerhoff was defeated in straight sets by Eddie Richardson, while Wickham suffered the same ignominy from Maurice Cowan, No. 1 player of the St. Albans team.

Joining this pair of unseeded upstarts in the semifinal round were second-seeded Billy Turner and third-seeded Jack Hoyt. Turner, though losing the first set for the second time in as many days, had little difficulty with Doyle Royal, prospective University of Maryland freshman. The scores were 6—8, 6—2, 6—3. Likewise, Hoyt breezed through Henry Watts, 6—1, 6—2.

Richardson, vastly improved over his form of last season, carried too many guns for Brinkerhoff who, as a late and unseeded entry, recently succeeded Davie Johnsen as junior champion by winning the City of Washington tournament. He had superb form and a well-rounded game with which Brinkerhoff could not cope.

As surprising as was Richardson's victory over Brinkerhoff, the triumph of 16-year-old Cowan over Wickham was but little less astonishing. Cowan, who can stand under your arm with inches to spare, has not lost a set in the tournament.

In today's semifinal matches Turner, now an odds-on choice to win the tournament, meets Cowan at 1 o'clock, and Richardson and Hoyt play an hour later.

Quarter-final round—Billy Turner defeated Doyle Royal, 6—8, 6—2, 6—3; Eddie Richardson defeated Harry Brinkerhoff, 6—2, 6—4; Jack Hoyt defeated Henry Watts, 6—1, 6—2; Maurice Cowan defeated Bill Wickham, 6—1, 6—4.
TODAY'S SCHEDULE
Semifinal round—1, Turner vs. Cowan; 2, Hoyt vs. Richardson.

Move Into 3-Way Tie For Industrial League Lead After Poor Start

Proof that Heurich, which won the first half of the Industrial League race, will be hard pressed to add another half to its laurels was furnished yesterday when O'Donnel's Grill carved out an 8 to 3 triumph over Russell Motors on the Ellipse. The result put three of the five clubs in the league—Heurich, O'Donnells and 7-Up—in a triple tie for the lead.

O'Donnell's, which started this half with a surprising loss to 7-Up, was never behind as it crushed the Motormen under 13 hits. Two runs in the first started the ball rolling, another was added in the second, and three more were registered in the third. Huck Robey was the toast of that spree, hitting a home run to score Bill Simonds after the latter had doubled.

With CONSIDINE

New York, June 21.—About one-half of the confusion which regularly clutters up the minds of boxing fans before a heavyweight championship fight is the direct result of a loud campaign of yes and no predictions by Jack Dempsey and Gene Tunney. The two old gaffers in recent years have been picking fights about the same way some of the journalistic touts pick the racing nags, to wit, with more hedging than you'll find in a speech on peace.

CONSIDINE

Dempsey, in communion with his several muses and ghosts, last summer picked Louis to knock out Schmeling, for the United Press; Schmeling to knock out Louis for a magazine called This Week, and hinted to I. N. S. and the A. P. that he wouldn't be surprised if the boys went to a 15-round draw. Tunney leaned first one way, then the other, and finally finished up by writing that neither he nor anybody else was competent to pick the outcome. This created such a stir among the professional fight experts that several were injured by heavy falls from limbs.

The boys are in training now for their Louis-Galento predictions. They are reading the collected speeches of Maj. Gen. John J. Phelan, the complete works of James Joyce and the philosophy of Japanese military leaders who call their war on China a cultural enterprise.

Pick Everything But Rain of Meteors

To clear their speaking pipes they are taking a series of short hops with Douglas "Wrong Way" Corrigan and any day now will come out fearlessly for (1) Louis, (2) Galento, (3) a draw and (4) Arthur Donovan and/or all. The only emergency they won't cover themselves on, by the time all their predictions are in, is the possibility that the fight will be called off on account of a meteor shower.

Tunney has been quoted as fearful that Galento may be killed in the Louis fight, but Joe Jacobs says that Gene called him up one day not long ago and told him that Two-Ton could beat Louis by covering up until he got in close and then going to work with short punches to Louis' body. According to Jacobs, Tunney was highly enthusiastic and offered to come to Galento's camp to show him just how to do it.

Dempsey, who sold him for $700, calls Galento a bum. For some reason or other that hurts Tony. Recently the two met and Galento is reported to have said, "Hey, why do you go around the country knocking my brains out? I'll knock that bum Louis into your lap. I at least fight colored fighters, but you ducked Harry Wills." Dempsey is alleged to have become apologetic at this and to have said, "I don't pan you, Tony. I'll be so happy if you kayo Louis that I'll give you 5,000 bucks." Whether Tony got that in writing, no one knows.

Make way then for the two whisky executives, turned expert. You can be pretty sure that by the time the Bomber and the Bung-Starter square off next week Jack and Gene will have picked everything connected with the fight except the timekeeper's teeth. And on the day after the fight, like the bloke who buys a ticket on every horse in a race, they can proudly yell in unison, "I had him."

U. S. Chances May Hinge on McNeil

Bobby Riggs' loss to Don McNeill in the finals of the French Tennis Championship has the United States net world in a dither. If McNeill has improved that much it might mean that America will safely defend the cup against the tough Australian team. For last year Riggs had no trouble beating Adrian Quist, the Australians' No. 2 man, and might well have beaten Jack Bromwich if the American team hadn't already defended the cup when the two met in the fifth and final match of the series.

On the other hand, some of the moralists within the U. S. L. T. A. fear that Bobby might have lost his match to McNeill before he reached the center court at the stade Roland Garros. They feel that Robert, the most convivial soul big league tennis has had since George Lott, might have left his punch somewhere in Montmarte. If that's the case, America's chances of retaining the Davis Cup correspond roughly to her chances of being invaded by the Siamese navy.

Ernest Sutter Is Upset In Clay Courts Tourney

Billy Talbert, Cincinnati, Wins Over 8th Seeded Player; Marman, Prusoff Extended

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 21.—Six seeded players passed their third round tests in the National Clay Courts tennis tournament today, but another—eighth seeded Ernest Sutter of New Orleans—fell by the way before rain halted the program.

Sutter bowed to Billy Talbert, of Cincinnati, in straight sets after forcing the youngster into extra games in the opening engagement. The scores were 8—6, 6—3.

Two others in the seeded list, Robert Harman, of Oakland, Calif., and Henry Prusoff, of Seattle, had to rally after dropping first sets. The sixth seeded Harman won over Tate Coulthard, of Berkeley, Calif., 2—6, 6—0, 6—0, while Prusoff, ranked sixteenth, finally turned back Gordon Reeder, of Gambier, Ohio, 0—6, 7—5, 6—3.

Gene Mako and Ronald Lubin, of Los Angeles, and Harold Surface and Wilbur Coen, jr., of Kansas City, all had easier sailing.

Opening round doubles play scheduled for today and the unfinished singles matches will be resumed tomorrow. Frankie Parker, seeded first in the singles, and the third seeded Mako are the favored team in the doubles division.

Happy Road, Paying $6.20, Wins Feature at Charles Town

Sam Palumbo Gives Victor Perfect Ride

Justa Pilgrim Runs Second; War Rumor Third; Daily Double Pays Backers $66.20

By Walter Haight.

Charles Town, W. Va., June 21.—Sammy Palumbo, jockey champion hereabouts, gave one of his good performances aboard Happy Road today as the 5-year-old gelding set all the pace to win the Washington Golf and Country Club Handicap, named in honor of a group of visiting golfers including Jimmie Cochrane, Henry Tait Rodier and Dorie Gruver. The winner, paying $6.20, was well backed by the group.

Happy Road, with the soft track he likes under him, made every post a winning one and registered time of 1:57 for the mile and an eighth. Justa Pilgrim, a determined long shot, was beaten two lengths, with War Rumor third in the field of eight.

The weather was as beautiful as there has been at the meeting and the track, drying out rapidly, was slow during the afternoon. However, racing was spirited and the camera was called into action with regularity.

In the feature, Happy Road was sprinted into a lead and was steadied along as Justa Pilgrim was kept close to him. War Rumor was a forward factor. On the back stretch both War Rumor and Justa Pilgrim made bids, but Happy Road had something to give both of them. Through the stretch, Happy Road drew out gradually.

A $66.20 daily double mutuel was paid to the holder of tickets of "5 and 2." Waugh Scout, a $5.80 favorite, was the winner of the second race and was the first triumph for Apprentice Jockey Carson Kirk in his career. He is a younger brother of Jackey Woodrow Kirk. King Dominant completed the transaction in the third race by galloping home in front of the pack to pay $11.20.

Cubs Blank Bees Although Outhit

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 21.—Chicago's Cubs and the Boston Bees had to suspend play at the end of eight and one-third innings on account of rain today, but not before Chicago had scored a 3-to-0 victory for its fourth straight triumph.

Bill Posedel was the losing pitcher, although he gave up only five hits, while the Bees made seven off Earl Whitehill. The Cubs, however, bunched three of their blows in the first inning, scoring two runs on singles by Stanley Hack and Billy Herman, Galan's sacrifice fly, and a triple by Carl Reynolds.

Balk in 9th Beats Nats For Tribe

thrill, though. The Nats made motions toward tying the score in the ninth, but one useless run was the most they could stir up.

There were bright visions of a tie score when Prichard opened the Nats ninth with a double to center and Rick Ferrell moved him to third with a single to left before Willis Hudlin, the Indians fifth pitcher of the wild afternoon, could get anybody out. Buddy Myer, as a pinch hitter, produced a run when he scored Prichard with a fly to Chapman and George Case moved Ferrell to second with a single to left.

But from that point, the uprising receded. Cecil Travis hit a tame fly to Chapman, Buddy Lewis drew a walk and Johnny Welaj grounded to Keltner who stepped on third for the final out.

Parade of Pitchers

Five Cleveland pitchers participated in the three-hour proceedings with the Nats knocking Mel Harder, Johnny Broaca, Bob Feller and Bill Zuber out of the box before they met up with Hudlin.

It was a sad affair for the Nats to lose. After the Indians had landed on young Joe Haynes for six runs in the fourth inning to take a 6-2 lead, the Nats tied the score in the seventh and took a 7-6 lead against Bob Feller with another outburst of hits.

Young Haynes pitched no-hit ball until he fell afoul of the Indians in the fifth, not an Injun reaching base in the first four innings. Then things began to happen. Heath beat out a bunt, Trosky doubled against the right field wall, Keltner tripled to center, Grimes walked, Lewis booted Webb's grounder, Harder tripled to left, Early let a third strike get away for an error and the sixth run of the inning scored as Chapman hit into a double play.

Twelve Nats Stranded

The Nats, who managed to leave a dozen men on base during the game, came up with two runs in the fifth inning when Sammy West doubled to right and hacked the Indian's lead to 6-4. And in the seventh they staged a stirring uprising against four Cleveland pitchers to move three runs across the plate.

Trosky's muff of a thrown ball started the Nats on their rally and Lewis followed with a double to right, knocking Harder from the box. In came Johnny Broaca and Sammy West greeted him with a two-bagger down the right field line that scored the tying runs and knocked Broaca out. The 6-6 tie was entrusted to Bob Feller, who didn't do so well. With one out, Jimmy Bloodworth, facing Feller for the first time in his life, whipped a single to left and West scored with the run that put the Nats in front, 7-6. Prichard followed with a single that moved Bloodworth to second and Feller was waved out.

Zuber came in at this point and the Nats got no more runs out of the inning with Krakky hitting into a force play at the plate and Case striking out.

Eventually came the ninth and the Nats gave the game back to the Indians.

runs and was charged with the loss. John Rigney finished. The victory went to Sundra, although he, too, had to be relieved by Johnny Murphy in the ninth.

Manager Jimmy Dykes of the Sox was banished in the sixth for disputing Umpire Cal Hubbard's judgment on a couple of Brown't pitches which were called balls.

Oil Marketing Bill Denounced By Indunstry

By the Associated Press.

Executives of several large oil companies and petroleum distributing organizations denounced yesterday a bill which would separate marketing operations from other branches of their industry.

One after another the witnesses, before a House Judiciary sub-committee, asserted that the Harrington (Democrat), Iowa, bill would foster rather than prevent monopoly and that it would result in an increase of gasoline prices.

W. T. Holliday, president of the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, said "It has only been the profits from its marketing operations" which enabled his company to survive during the last ten years.

Other witnesses included J. Howard Pew, president of the Sun Oil Company; Eric V. Weber, of Cincinnati, and Hubert B. Fuller, of Cleveland, president and attorney respectively of the Ohio Petroleum Marketers Association; John A. Brown, president of the Socony-Vacuum Company, and William R. Schuh, president of the National Association of Petroleum Retailers.

Fall From 55% Forecast for Steel Output

But Shipments of Heavy Construction Steels Show Gains

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 21.—Pointing out that the rate of ingot production rose last week to 55 per cent of the steel industry's capacity, Iron Age magazine warned today that this rate might not continue. The publication said:

"Orders for semi-finished steel and finished steel in the aggregate compare favorably with those received during the same period in May, but, except in heavy steels for construction work and in flat rolled products being taken out against recent committments, the volume is showing no appreciable gains.

"Unless sheet and strip specifications come in more rapidly, the present rate of ingot production may not be maintained during the next few weeks, although the prospect still appears to be good for a further set-up several weeks hence when automobile manufacturers are ordering more heavily for 1940 model production . . .

Scrap Rise Halted

"Pending the further clarification of the outlook for steel production during the summer months, the advance in scrap prices has halted. In fact, the average quotation at Chicago is slightly lower, resulting in a decline of 4 cents a ton in the Iron Age scrap composite price to $14.75. Basically, the scrap situation is strong, but additional mill purchasing will be required to give prices a further boost.

"Strength at seaboard points has been derived from a fresh purchase of about 100,000 tons by the European scrap cartel, which brings the total of its orders placed in this country in the past two months to more than 500,000 tons. Prices paid were approximately the same as on other recent purchases. Renewed agitation in Washington for a limitation on scrap exports has not yet reached the point of introduction of legislation, and there are doubts there that any action will affect scrap unless other strategic materials are also included."

Columbia Gas Derives From Geologic Unit

By the Associated Press.

Edward S. Pinney, counsel for Columbia Gas and Electric Corporation, told the Securities Commission yesterday that the company's natural gas operations had developed within the limits of a "single geologic formation."

He made this statement before the commission which heard oral arguments on the $700,000,000 utility holding company's plan for simplification under the holding company act.

The question of whether the Columbia gas and electric system would be properly simplified under its plan, he said, has to be decided against a geographical, economic and engineering background. All the system's companies, he said, are "certainly" located in an area which has developed as a unit.

Columbia, which serves communities in West Virginia, Kentucky, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, and other Atlantic seaboard States, gets about 67 per cent of its gross revenues from gas. The balance of its revenues is derived from electric utilities, tractions and miscellaneous services.

Wheat Prices Yield to Sales By Winnipeg

Drive at Closing Wipes Out Gains In Earlier Trading

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 21.—Wheat prices which advanced ⅝ cent a bushel in a nervous trade early today, held firm most of the session but tumbled in the final minutes to close ⅞—1⅛ lower.

Selling in Winnipeg by large commission houses with U. S. connections touched off stop loss selling orders here that swept December wheat to 71⅝, off 1⅛ and at a new season low. July and September fell to 69¾ and 70½, respectively, new lows on the movement and lowest prices in two months.

July wheat closed here at 69¾—⅞ and September, 70⅝—½. Corn finished ⅜—¾ off, July, 49—49⅛; September, 50½—⅝; oats, ¾—1⅞ off; soy beans, 1 cent off to 1 cent up; rye, 2—2¼ off; lard, unchanged to 5 cents off.

United Corp. Takes Step To Change Its Status

New York, June 21 (AP).—United Corporation announced today that it would publish, about July 1, an itemized list of its investment of about $2,500,000 in nonutility common stocks of the so-called "blue chip" variety.

The company has hesitated because of the disturbed foreign situation, it was said, to invest in nonutility equities the remainder of $8,000,000 which the Securities Exchange Commission authorized last March for a six-months period. The move was described as a step in the company's plan to change its status from that of a public utility holding company to that of combined investment, financing and underwriting organization.

Index of Business Dips in Week

New York, June 21 (AP).—Time magazine's index of business conditions declined last week to 92.7 from 93.6 the previous week, marking its second successive decline.

Continued low spending in trade centers and a decrease in financial spending in big cities were responsible for the downward movement.

The Market

By C. Norman Stabler
A Special Correspondent.

Prices Hold Steady in Light Trading Financial News Scarce and Unimportant Average Slightly Below Last Week's High

New York, June 21.—Firmness characterized the stock market today in another session of dull trading. Volume on the big board was 466,050 shares and the composite average showed a minor gain of 0.08 point, with changes in most of the leaders being fractional. Financial news of the day was not of the type to stir speculative enthusiasm and the street wondered just when the market will get its teeth into anything important enough to shake prices out of their present rut.

The market showed signs of rounding out today, having made fair progress for half a week and eliminating much of the loss of the previous week. At its best today it was still short of the high made the previous week and everything indicates that small and large traders are holding to the sidelines awaiting developments. This has been their customary role for weeks.

Envying New Jersey

In fact, the fashion of waiting is making things so dull for the brokers that they doubtless look with envy across the river, where horse racing is to be made legal. A few years ago the stock exchange considered moving to the enlightened State of New Jersey when the home State threatened extra taxation, but the plan fell through.

Those members of the financial community who want a run for their money figure that they might get it better by placing it on the nose of a horse than on a stock. At least they might figure it that way if the ethics of their profession sanctioned gambling. Some years ago, before the SEC, the stock exchange formally forbade gambling in its building by posting in the press room a reminder to newspapermen that their card games must be strictly for fun. If only gambling were permitted, those members of the exchange who made $2 a day might pyramid on a horse.

At the moment the worry of the Street is lawmakers rather than bookmakers. Interest centers on Washington's handicappers as Congress comes into the stretch for the final days of legislation. The financial community is convinced that the Administration will exert every effort to force through the Mead bill or some other measure providing loans for business under which loans would be 90 per cent guaranteed by the Government. Such loans presumably would be on business risks which are too sour for the banks, thus carrying out the theory that if the losses are saddled onto Uncle Sam it doesn't make any difference.

This proposal, coupled with the effort being made by Western Senators of the silver bloc to force through a $2,000,000,000 currency inflation program, indicate the increasing danger which the country faces from unsound monetary legislation here in the closing days of Congress. And it is impossible to disassociate such schemes from the approaching Presidential election of next year. It appears certain that every effort will be made to spend and spend and elect and elect.

Favorable Power Report

News of business produced no noticeable effect upon security prices today. The mid-week power report was favorable, showing production of electricity for the week ended June 17 at a new high since February 11 and 13.7 per cent above the total for the same week last year. The major improvements over the preceding week were made in the industrial areas. The Iron Age reported that the steel industry and the lines of activity upon which it largely depends have recovered most of the ground lost during April and May. Increases in automobile assemblies, building construction and steel output have brought about most of the betterment in the steel industry.

Among individual stocks, Chrysler was well supported, gaining a point, and there was fractional improvement in General Motors. Loft was the day's most active issue, followed by United States Rubber, both up small amounts. Celanese came forward with a point gain as did Public Service of New Jersey. Telephone added a half point.

Treasury Bonds Advance

Listed bonds today reflected mild inquiry for almost all types of securities. United States Treasury obligations moved up impressively, with gains ranging to ⅜ point, and best rated corporate bonds also firmed. Among speculative issues small gains were the rule, and occasional advances of a point or more also were noted. In the foreign department Panama 5s spurted, owing to the favorable Senate committee report on the proposed treaty. Turnover in all bonds was $5,520,000.

The advance in long-term Treasury bonds began to make inroads on the recent losses, occasioned by rumors of fresh lending-spending in Washington. It was aided by the announcement that $100,000,000 Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation bonds will be redeemed September 1, without refunding. Guaranteed issues of the farm and home corporations were slightly better. Among best grade utility, railroad and industrial bonds the main trend was upward, with changes naturally quite small. New corporate issues are finding ready buyers.

Rail Issues Firm

Medium-priced railroad bonds were dull but firm. Gains ranging from fractions to a point appeared in the better established issues which still have an investment aspect. Border-line and default rails were irregularly better. Holding company bonds did well, and some buying was noted in best industrial convertibles. The local traction group attracted fresh buying, as did amusement issues and other special sections.

Stamped Panama 5s ended with a gain of 3½ points, owing to the favorable aspect of the treaty problem. Panama 5½s also improved. But Latin-American bonds in general remained dull and soft. Italian issues were thriftily purchased, apparently for sinking fund accounts, and some interest in Japanese issues also was indicated. Highest grade foreigns were idle.

Martin Reports Savings Effected By N. Y. Exchange

New York, June 21. (AP).—William McChesney Martin, jr., president New York Stock Exchange, today reported to members the administrative economies he effected in the first year of his salaried presidency.

Gross payroll was reduced $307,355 or 7.9 per cent to $3,647,748, and 136 employes were laid off. Of remaining employes 815 got raises, averaging $2.34 a week, totaling $99,332.

Non-essential services, such as the medical clinic and barber shop, were severed from the exchange and turned over to former managers to operate as private businesses.

The administrative offices were revised, with increase of vice presidents' responsibilities, and executive offices were remodeled.

Highest consolidated net loss for the period was $208,189 for May, 1938, the month Martin became paid president. Lowest was last October's net loss of $60,980.

New York, June 21 (AP).—An issue of long-term bonds of Southern Bell Telephone Co., this summer is in contemplation, financial sources said today. Southern Bell has no publicly held security issue to refund. More than $4,000,000 of 4 per cent notes sold to the pension fund may also be reacquired, leaving a substantial balance for new construction.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Today you will have an opportunity to enjoy an imaginary partnership with each of the skillful Four Aces—Oswald Jacoby, David Bruce Burnstone, Howard Schenken and M. D. Maier—in a quiz compiled from questions asked by the Aces of their followers. If you play their system, you should do well on this test. If not, you should have a lot of fun anyway.

Ready; set; go.

1. Oswald Jacoby is your partner. The opponents are vulnerable; you are not. You hold:

♠K76432
◇973
♣65

The bidding:

Jacoby	Schenken	You	Maier
1 ♠	Dbl.	(?)

What do you bid?

2. You are David Bruce Burnstone's partner and hold:

♠AKQJ642
♡A53
◇86

The bidding:

You	Schenken	Burnstone	Maier
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♣	Pass

What do you bid?

3. Howard Schenken is your partner. You are the dealer and hold:

♠Q73
◇AK95
♣AKJ4

The bidding:

You	Jacoby	Schenken	Burnstone

What do you bid?

4. Merwin Maier is your partner. You hold:

♠Q109764
◇862
♣K9

The bidding:

Maier	Burnstone	You	Schenken
1 ◇	1 ♠	(?)

What do you bid?

Answers to Quiz

1. Your correct bid is four spades. You don't really expect to make this contract but you do want to make it as hard as possible for your opponents to set into the biddins.

Score 100 per cent for four spades. 70 per cent for three spades (the jump to three spades over the double is not a forcing bid). 40 per cent for two spades (won't shut them out). 0 for pass. Note: A lot of players would like to try some very fancy bid such as two no trump with this hand. Such bids are justifiable in this instance, but there are too many of them for us to assign marks.

2. Your correct bid is four spades. This bid shows clearly that your spades are solid and is a mild slam invitation.

Score 100 per cent for four spades, 80 per cent for three spades (this bid would imply weaker spades and greater side strength), 40 per cent for five spades (an overbid), 0 for two spades.

3. Your correct bid is two clubs. If Mr. Schenken passes, you undoubtedly have not missed a game. If he bids two diamonds, you bid two spades; if he bids two spades, you bid three spades; if he bids two no trump, you bid three no trump.

Score 100 per cent for two clubs, 70 per cent for two spades (an underbid), 50 per cent for three spades (an immediate jump raise is always undesirable with three trumps), 0 for one or two no trump (you have a worthless doubleton in hearts and if the hand does play at no trump your partner should be the declarer).

4. Your correct bid is to pass. If you double, the chances are that Mr. Schenken will rescue. Then if your partner doubles the rescue bid, you will be afraid to leave it in, but at the same time you have no place to take it out. However, if Mr. Maier can now double one spade for take-out, you will, of course, leave it in.

Score 100 per cent for pass, 60 per cent for double, 0 for any other bid.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

STARTING OFF with a slice of the serious side: The United States Civil Service Commission is calling in the flock of competitive examinations for the Department of Agriculture.

Applications must be on file in the Commission's office here not later than July 17 if received from States east of Colorado. Colorado and farther west may hold out for a July 20 deadline.

Secretary Henry A. Wallace's new farm help will include: Senior field aid, assistant laboratory aid, junior laboratory aid, associate warehouse examiner, assistant warehouse examiner, and junior warehouse examiner.

For further information—the Civil Service Commission at Seventh and F streets is primed to tell all.

ABOUT AS MANY Treasury Department employes as you can count on your fingers and thumbs are saving up some of their annual leave, come September 25. They'll blow out to windy Chicago to paint the town rosey during meetings there of the American Legion convention.

Present commander of the Dollar and Dimes unit under Mr. Morgenthau's roof is Robert Beeton. He can tabulate with pride that there are approximately 20 more members of his post than this time last year. The complete over-all count for the Treasury's doughboys (and this time we mean dough as in "army") runs up to a budget of about 180.

Former commanders include J. I. Bellow who helped to start the Treasury group on its march early in 1935. Others in order of appearance have been Charles Dailey and William T. Slattery.

Kenneth Bovay, who gave us all these figures, has served for three years as financial officer . . . so he's had plenty of experience in knowing what they add up to. One hundred and eighty sounds like some sum.

ONE GROUP of Government employes who are downright sentimental about their jobs are those who work for the U. S. Housing Authority. They are going in for bus trips (and after working hours) to the town's pet home-sweet-home project. Langston Terrace at 2191 G street northeast.

Franklin Thorne, who beats a tattoo on the door the first of each month for rent at Langston Terrace, can tell them plenty about Uncle Sam in the role of Uncle Landlord.

During the year just filed away 274 families have moved their rocking chairs into Langston. Red ink, due to vacancies, has written during that period the shrinkingly modest amount of $35.78, just enough to fold down and tuck away in your vest pocket without causing any undue hardships on the seams. Rent not collected stands at somewhere around $49.33. Both sums together make something the ledger can handle.

But here's the pay-off. The total revenue collected, down to the last Lincoln penny, has been $78,314.12.

Two-room nests at Langston come at $19.30 every month. Tenants of five-room units take it on the chin a little harder than that, but not enough to make them groggy. They dig in their jeans for $31.85.

If things keep up like this, the old-fashioned rent collector and his wolf can get a job at a summer theater for second-class villain in the "Perils of Peggy." Even at that, he'll be hissed off the stage.

SPEAKING of theaters, the Interstate Commerce Commission's dramatic group is still on the small side, but its director, Florence Kuhns, isn't worried about that. After the Fourth of July, when it gets quiet again, the newest organization of government thespians will really start learning parts. Heretofore, the Interstate Commerce Commission's talent shows which loom up twice a year have stuck pretty close to tap dancing or singing, but not too much on the serious side. Then a crowd of them got together and worked up a cast for a playlet called "Babbitt's Boy." Babbitt's boy turned out to be a pretty good boy, judging from the hand-spanking out in the audience.

The brand new "actors" are not planning any big curtain-raising right away. This is sort of an of-by-and-for organization. Any declaiming they do at the present will be just for their friends and severest critics. Florence Kuhn, herself, before she came to Washington from Pittsburgh three years ago, had already trod quite a few amateur boards and directed several musicales.

Bob Burns Says—

All men have tasted defeat. But the successful ones are those who refuse to swallow it. Of course, that statement don't hold true with the college boy who lost a bet when he couldn't swallow a goldfish.

Last fall, my Uncle Obie, the salesman, knocked at a man's door and said, "Pardon me, brother, but I'm sellin' a wonderful book that your children . . ."

The man said, "I ain't got any children."

Obie said, "Well, then perhaps your wife . . ."

The man said, "I ain't got a wife! Take your book and get out. There's nobody here but me and the cat."

Obie said, "Then this volume is just what you need. Every now and then don't you want a good, heavy book to throw at the cat?"

The fine arts section of the procurement division, Treasury Department, Tuesday announced a competition for the mural decoration of 48 postoffices—one in each of the States.

Different from any project previously sponsored by the section, it permits an artist from Indiana to submit designs for a postoffice in Oregon or a Georgian to compete for the commission of decorating a postoffice in Nebraska.

Winning designs will be exhibited at the Corcoran Gallery of Art here. Entries must be submitted by October 2. The jury on awards will consist of Maurice Sterne, San Francisco; Henry Varnum Poor, New York City, N. Y.; Olin Dows, of Washington and Rhinebeck, N. Y., and Edgar Miller, Chicago.

PULITZER PRIZE NOVEL

THE YEARLING

By Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings

CHAPTER XVI.

PENNY LEFT HIM to the struggle. His arms ached from the strain. He was afraid to tug too hard for fear of breaking the line. He dared not yield an inch for fear a sudden slackness would tell of the loss of the giant. He longed for magic words from his father, indicating some miracle by which he might land his fish and be done with the torment. The bass was sulking. It made a dash for the grasses, where it might tangle the line around their stems and so rip free. It came to Jody that if he walked around the edge of the pond, keeping a taut line, he might lead the bass into shallow water and flounder him at the edge. He worked cautiously. He was tempted to drop the pole and clutch the line itself and come to grips with his adversary. He began to walk away from the pond. He gave his pole a heave and landed the bass, flouncing, in the grass. He dropped the pole and ran, to move the catch to a final safety. The bass would weigh ten pounds. Penny came to him.

"Boy, I'm proud of you. Nobody couldn't of handled him better."

Jody stood panting. Penny thumped him on the back, as excited as he. He looked down, unbelieving, at the stout form and the great maw.

"I feel as good as if 'twas ol' Slewfoot," he said, and they grinned together and pummeled each other's backs.

"Now I got to go beat you," Penny said.

They took separate ponds. Penny called that he was licked and beaten. He began fishing for Ma Baxter's bream with a hand-line and bonnet worms. Jody cast and cast again, but there was never the mad swirl of waters, the great leap, the live and struggling weight. He caught a small bass and held it up to show his father.

"Throw him back," Penny called. "We don't need him for eatin'. Leave him to grow up big as t'other one. Then we'll come back agin and ketch him."

JODY PUT THE SMALL FISH back reluctantly and watched it swim away. His father was stern about not taking more of anything, fish or game, than could be eaten or kept. Hope of another monster dwindled as the sun finished its spring arc of the daylight sky. He cast leisurely, taking his pleasure in his increasing dexterity of arm and wrist. The moon was now wrong. It was no longer feeding time. The fish were not striking. Suddenly he heard his father whistle like a quail. It was the signal they used together in squirrel hunting. Jody laid down his pole and looked back to make sure he could identify the tuft of grass where he had covered his bass from the rays of the sun. He walked cautiously to where his father beckoned.

Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings

He pointed. "The whoopin' cranes is dancin'."

Jody saw the great white birds in the distance. His father's eye, he thought, was like an eagle's. They crouched on all fours and crept forward slowly. Now and then Penny dropped flat on his stomach and Jody dropped behind him. They reached a clump of high saw-grass, and Penny motioned for concealment behind it. The birds were so close that it seemed to Jody he might touch them with his long fishing pole. Penny squatted on his haunches, and Jody followed. His eyes were wide. He made a count of the whooping cranes. There were 16.

The cranes were dancing a cotillion as surely as it was danced at Volusia. Two stood apart, erect and white, making a strange music that was part cry and part singing. The rhythm was irregular, like the dance. The other birds were in a circle. In the heart of the circle, several moved counter-clock-wise. The musicians made their music. The dancers raised their wings and lifted their feet, first one and then the other. They sunk their heads deep in their snowy breasts, lifted them and sunk again. They moved soundlessly, part awkwardness, part grace. The dance was solemn. Wings fluttered, rising and falling like outstretched arms. The outer circle shuffled around and around. The group in the center attained a slow frenzy.

SUDDENLY ALL MOTION ceased. Jody thought the dance was over, or that the intruders had been discovered. Then the two musicians joined the circle. Two others took their places. There was a pause. The dance was resumed. The birds were reflected in the clear marsh water. Sixteen white shadows reflected the motions. The evening breeze moved across the saw-grass. It bowed and fluttered. The water rippled. The setting sun lay rosy on the white bodies. Magic birds were dancing in a mystic marsh. The grass swayed with them, and the shallow waters, and the earth fluttered under them. The earth was dancing with the cranes, and the low sun, and the wind and sky.

Jody found his own arms lifting and falling with his breath, as the cranes' wings lifted. The sun was sinking into the saw-grass. The marsh was golden. The whooping cranes were washed with gold. The far hammocks were black. Darkness came to the lily pads, and the water blackened. The cranes were whiter than any clouds, or any white bloom of oleander or of lily. Without warning, they took flight. Whether the hour-long dance was, simply, done, or whether the long nose of an alligator had lifted above the water to alarm them, Jody could not tell, but they were gone. They made a great circle against the sunset, whooping their strange rusty cry that sounded only in their flight. Then they flew in a long line into the west and vanished.

Penny and Jody straightened and stood up. They were cramped from the long crouching. Dusk lay over the saw-grass, so that the ponds were scarcely visible. The world was shadow, melting into shadow. They turned to the north. Jody found his bass. They cut to the east, to leave the marsh behind them, then north again. The trail was dim in the growing darkness. It joined the scrub road, and they turned once more east, continuing now in a certainty, for the dense growth of the scrub bordered the road like walls. The scrub was black, and the road was a dark gay strip of carpet, sandy and soundless. Small creatures darted across in front of them and scurried in the bushes. In the distance, a panther screamed. Bull-bats shot low over their heads. They walked in silence.

At the house, bread was baked and waiting, and hot fat was in the iron skillet. Penny lighted a fat-wood torch and went to the lot to do his chores. Jody scaled and dressed the fish at the back stoop, where a ray of light glimmered from the fire on the hearth. Ma Baxter dipped the pieces in meal and fried them crisp and golden. The family ate without speaking.

She said, "What ails you fellers?"

They did not answer. They had no thought for what they ate nor for the woman. They were no more than conscious that she spoke to them. They had seen a thing that was unearthly. They were in a trance from the strong spell of its beauty.

THE FAWNS WERE being born. Jody saw through the scrub the delicate tracery of their small pointed hooves. Wherever he went, to the sink-hole, for wood into the black-jacks south of the lot, to the traps, Penny was obliged to keep about for varmints, he walked with eyes on the ground, watching for signs of their comings and their goings. The larger hoof-marks of the does usually preceded them. But the does were wary. Often the doe-sign was in one place, where the mother had fed alone, and the wavering fawn-sign was some distance away, where the infant had been left in the greater safety of heavy cover. Often there were twin fawns. When Jody found the double set of tracks he could scarcely contain himself.

He thought always then, "I could leave one for the mammy and take one for myself."

He broached the matter to his mother one evening.

"Ma, we got milk a-plenty. Cain't I git me a leetle ol' fawn for a pet for me? A spotted fawn, Ma. Cain't I?"

"I should jest say not. What you mean, milk a-plenty? They ain't a extry drop left from sun to sun."

"It could have my milk."

"Yes, and fatten the blasted fawn and you grow up puny. Much as we all got to do, what on earth do you want with one o' them things, blaying around here day and night?"

"I want one. I want a 'coon, but I know a 'coon gits mischievous. I'd love a bear cub, but I know they're liable to be mean. If jest want something—" he puckered his face so that his freckles ran together—"I jest want something all my own. Something to foller me and be mine." He struggled for words. "I want something with dependence to it."

His mother snorted.

"Well, you'll not find that nowhere. Not in the animal world nor in the world o' man. Now Jody, I'll not have you pesterin' me. You say another word, 'fawn' or 'coon' or 'bear cub,' and I'll take a bresh to you."

PENNY LISTENED quietly from his corner.

In the morning he said, "We'll go hunt us a buck today, Jody. Likely we'll find a fawn beddin'. Hit's near about as much pleasure seein' 'em wild as havin' 'em tame."

"Will we take both dogs?"

"Nobody but old Julia. She ain't had a work-out since she was hurt. A slow hunt'll do her good."

Ma Baxter said, "That last venison didn't last no time. But we did jerk right smart of it, come to think of it. Git a few hams in the smokehouse and hit'll look natural agin."

Her good nature rose and fell with the food supply.
